FRITZ LANHAM TO DELIVER A CLASS ADDRESS

Fritz G. Lanham, national representative and son of former Governor Lanham, will deliver the class address of the Midland high school on Sunday, May 17, he said in a letter to Superintendent W. W. Lackey.

"I am pleased to be able to advise you that I can be with you," he said. "I look forward with pleasure to the opportunity."

The representative is a favorite "son of Texas," eloquent, witty, full of humor and pathos, a clever punster, a great layman, a great orator and rightfully called "a great man in his own right."

He is possibly the most eloquent speaker to ever visit Midland. He is picked annually by the greatest universities and colleges of the South to address student bodies on subjects vital to education and is always in demand as a speaker in the largest cities on national holidays.

His home is in Fort Worth. Correspondence between Lanham and Superintendent Lackey has been continuous for several days.

The trio was on the way to the barns to cash checks for street car employees when the bandits forced their car to the curb.

The bandits escaped.

ORTHODOX ONES EMBITTERED BY FREE THINKERS

EL PASO, April 20. (UP).—A movement to organize free-thinkers and liberals in opposition to theology as an enemy to personal liberties is being met in the southwest by denunciation of the clergy.

With its headquarters in El Paso, the Southwestern Rationalist association is militantly seeking to organize the army of liberals. The association assails theology as the historic enemy of progress and as antisocial in its result; it opposes churches as interfering with the rights and liberties of others.

Numerous pastors in New Mexico and western Texas, where the association is being organized, characterized the movement as "the blustering of persons who are trying to disrupt religion." Sermons have been preached from their pulpits and statements issued to the press.

"A live, active, liberal free-thought society, to unite all liberals and free-thinkers into a common army to defend the truths of science and the more modern and enlightened views of religion against the propagation of ancient traditionary theology, the historic enemy of liberty and progress, and to maintain the American principle of separation of church and state," is the object of the association, according to literature issued in a membership campaign.

Lawrence of Arabia Now Explains Aged Secrecies

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Lawrence of Arabia has spoken! Lawrence who whirled like a mysterious force of the dunes of Arabia, to found an empire on its shifting political sands, has broken a silence of eight years to tell why he waved aside honor and glory, to sink his identity beneath the tunic of a private soldier.

Today, from his own lips, the United Press is able to give his answer to a riddle of eight years the reason why this man, whose "kingdom" stretched from the Red Sea to the Persian Gulf, from Aleppo to Mecca, changed his name and became a humble mechanic in his majesty's air force.

By HENRY T. RUSSELL, United Press Staff Correspondent. (Copyright, 1931, In All Countries by United Press. All Rights Reserved.)

PLYMOUTH, Eng., April 20. (UP).—Lawrence of Arabia, the most mysterious figure that emerged from the great war, now serving in the Royal Air force as Aircraftman T. E. Shaw, lifted today the veil of secrecy which has surrounded his life during the past 10 years.

This man who, single-handed, raised the Arabs against the Turks, changed the fate of the allies on the Palestine war front, and for whose body, dead or alive, the Turks offered $50,000 reward, told for the first time why he gave up the position which earned for him the description "uncrowned king of Arabia," abandoned his rank of colonel in the British army, refused all titles, monetary rewards, decorations and honors, picked a new name and enlisted in the Royal Air force as a private.

As Colonel Lawrence during "his" war in the desert, he had virtual command of the entire Arab army. Today, as Aircraftman Shaw, he must obey anyone above the rank of an aircraftman, first class, who gives him orders.

During the war Lawrence was entrusted by the British government at various times with huge sums of gold which he apportioned as he saw fit among the Arab chieftains

Lawrence the Unknown, his burnoose-clad figure appearing and disappearing like magic in the tents of desert princes, is the man who fanned the flame of Arab revolt, and welded in its fire the engine that swept Turkish rule from the land. Today he tells why, shunning titles and honors, he asks for "nothing but modest contentment."

This is the first explanation of the mystery of "Aircraftman Shaw." It was to Henry T. Russell, of the United Press London bureau that he gave his story, in personal and privileged conversation.

Following is the first of a series of four articles by Mr. Russell:

who fought his battles.

Now his pay is eighty cents a day. From this he saves a small portion. The rest he spends on gasoline for his American-built speedboat, his motorcycle, and from gramophone records for what he calls his "tuned music" supply.

No Arabian prince ever had such power as Lawrence had during the war. Not even Field Marshal Lord Allenby in command of the Allied forces in Palestine or any other of Lawrence's technically superior officers, interfered with the orders which he issued in the desert.

Lawrence was in effect, "uncrowned king of Arabia." Now he lives in an army hut with 19 other men, most of them air force mechanics. He sleeps on an olive-green iron army cot with a tough mattress of cocoon fibre. He has five service blankets and a pair of sheets to cover him. His pillow, of the same substance, is as tough as his mattress. Above his cot is a green steel locker. This generally contains most of the owner's "treasures"—books, tobacco, spare clothing, and the like.

Lawrence showed me all this. While he was doing so he told me why he chose this mode of living. He explained how he felt to be "hounded by the ghost of fame." He denied ill-health caused him to retire.

DEATH IN THE JUNGLES

Once more there has been trouble in Nicaragua, and some more American marines have been killed. The list of young Americans who have given up their lives in those Central American jungles during the last two decades is getting rather long; and nothing is more curious than the way in which our attitude toward it has changed.

A generation ago we accepted, almost as a matter of course, the regular Kipling viewpoint on such matters. We liked to muse about "manifest destiny," we liked to think our marines as gallant young men who were dying in lonely wildernesses in order that the "lesser breeds without the law" could share in the blessings of American civilization. We were fond of talking of the "white man's burden."

It was all very romantic. It relieved us, besides, of the necessity of thinking very deeply about the rights and wrongs of our conduct. To be self-righteous is to be unworried. The marines who stopped bullets in Nicaragua, or Haiti, or anywhere else about the Caribbean Sea, were heroes who died for a lofty cause.

But it doesn't seem so simple these days. We have uncomfortable qualms whenever we learn that some more marines have been killed. We want to know why; we want to know who sent them there in the first place, and whether the job they were doing was worth the price of their lives.

This doesn't mean that we are any less ready to give to the slain marines their just dues. They were gallant lads, and they faced death, as they always have, without a whimper. It does mean, however, that we, their countrymen, are less ready to accept vague assurances that it was quite fitting and proper for them to be killed.

All in all, the business of getting at the rights and wrongs of the thing seems to be much more complex than it used to be. Our confidence in our own eternal rightness has been shaken. The old injunction, "civilize 'em with a Krag," fails to satisfy us.

On the whole, this is a good sign. Probably the chief defect of the long era that blazed to a close in the World War was that it was too uncritical. It was too prone to accept slogans and phrases without examining them. To be sure, it had the courage of its convictions. It would die for its beliefs, very readily. But to die for a cause may be less noble than to live and find out if the cause be a good one.

So we don't accept the deaths of our marines in Nicaragua as complacently as we used to. The marines themselves ought to be thankful; for if we keep on doubting and asking questions, the time will come when it is no longer necessary for marines to die in lonely Central American jungles.

OLD AGE AND USEFULNESS

It is quite possible that age has too much to do with our conception of usefulness. Sometimes it becomes a stark sort of ghost that walks along, just waiting for a good chance to step out and grab an old man or old woman who is still capable, but has been alive so long that the world thinks he should sit in a rocking chair in a corner somewhere.

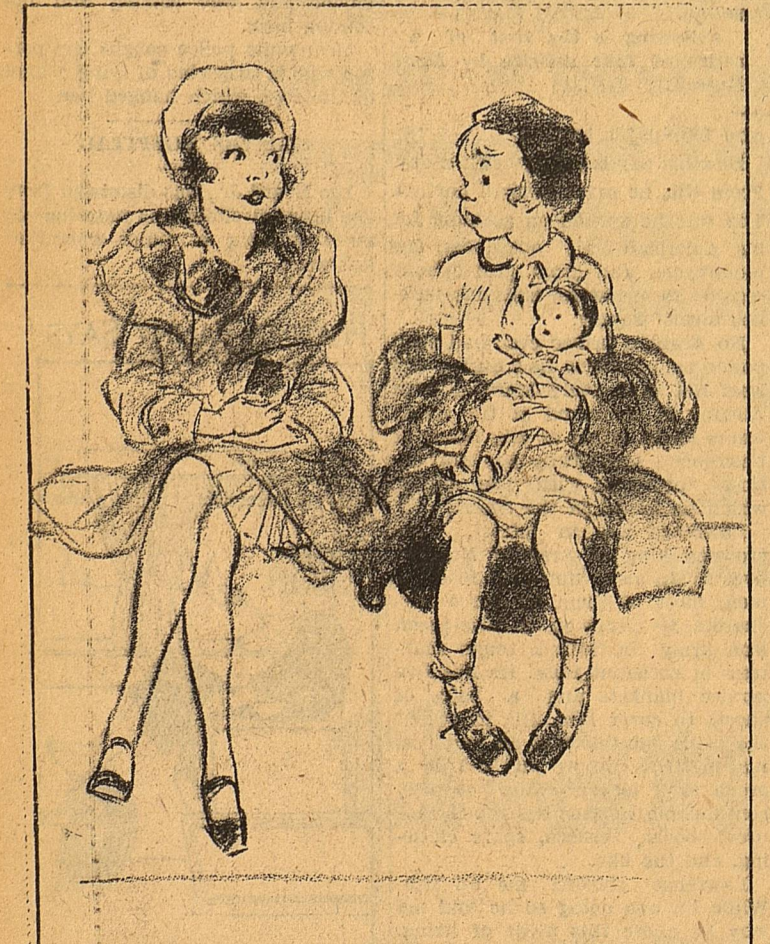

That is the way it was with Mme. Heene Delpierre, a bookbinder in Paris. She was 101 years old but she was afraid that she would lose her job if she told her age. But the other day the new social insurance act went into effect and she had to face the official registration of workers. She told her age.

No one had thought that she was more than 60. Her work was swift, thorough, efficient. She earned her salary. Now there is a movement to secure a pension for her. She hasn't lost her job. No one can question her ability.

But if it had been known that she had reached a great-motherly age, years ago, in all probability everyone would have supposed that her days of usefulness were numbered. It is doubtful if she would have been given a chance to go on.

Age need not control our actions. Some people remain physically capable of self-support long after others.

Committee on Costs of Medical Care Reveals That Physicians Work Longer Hours, but Dentists Average Larger Net Incomes—U. S. Has One Doctor to Every 800 Persons

WASHINGTON.—It may be difficult to guess why lawyers, employed married women, traveling men and automobile and real estate salesmen should be especially delinquent about paying their bills, but a Detroit dentist says he has learned from experience that they are poor risks and so makes them all pay in advance.

That's one of the curious facts discovered by the Committee on Costs of Medical Care, which is making surveys and finding out things about physicians, dentists and hospitals. The Bureau of Education, too, has been finding out things concerning medical education—such as the fact that the largest enrollment among the 78 medical schools under the United States flag is at the University of St. Thomas in the Philippines.

Philadelphia, the Committee on Costs of Medical Care reports, spends more than $100,000,000 a year—or more than $50 for each inhabitant—in direct and indirect medical expenses. Twenty-six per cent went to physicians, 13 per cent to dentists, 27 per cent was spent on hospitals and 20 per cent on drugs and medicines.

Doctors Work Long Hours It was found in Detroit that the typical physician has spent 74 years preparing to practice medicine, works 57 1-2 hours a week, gives free care to seven per cent of his patients, reduced his regular fees for 19 per cent of them, has $3,227 invested in equipment, pays out 45 cents for professional expenses from every dollar he receives and has a net annual income of $5596.

General practitioners work on average of 65 hours a week in Philadelphia and 61 hours in Detroit. Nearly a third of Philadelphia's physicians said they worked 70 hours a week. Net incomes in that city ran from one doctor's deficit of more than $1000 to a specialist's profit of $36,500 in a year. Philadelphia doctors averaged $440 less in annual net income than those in Detroit.

Specialists' Equipment Costly Specialists generally have spent more time in preliminary study, work fewer hours and make more money, the committee reports. The equipment of some specialists costs as high as $18,000, the average for Detroit being $2281 for general practitioners and $5211 for complete specialists.

General practitioners averaged annual net incomes of $4750 and complete specialists $7805. Dentists—although one of them, as mentioned, charges lawyers, employed married women and some salesmen in advance—are in Detroit at least, a generous lot. Eighty-seven per cent of them in that city said they sometimes gave treatment at reduced fees to patients unable to pay the full charge and 60 per cent said they sometimes gave free treatment. The committee reported that the dentists were spending a third of their time in work for which there was no direct remuneration or in simply waiting for patients.

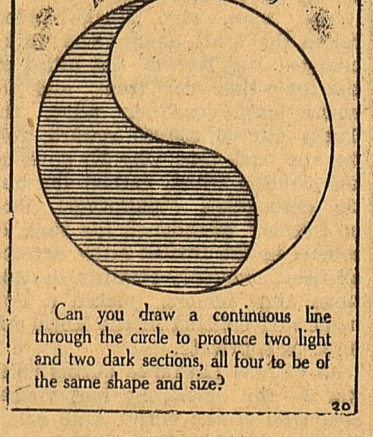

Dentists' Incomes Higher They averaged larger net incomes than the doctors—$6075 annually as against the physicians' $5596. The highest dental income, however, was only $20,000. The average working week was found to be 44 hours a week, and the average of charges, running from a dollar to $14 an hour, was $7.75 an hour, of which $4.50 was the dentist's net profit. The average capital investment required to set up and equip an office had been $5937, although one dentist had laid out $37,500.

The Bureau of Education adds that there is one doctor to every 800 persons in the United States, more in proportion than any other representative country. England, for instance, has one to every 1490 persons, France one to 1690 and Sweden one to 2680.

Mrs. B. B. Naulin of Dallas and Mrs. L. L. Marx of Birmingham, Alabama, were guests in Midland Sunday night. Mrs. Naulin will be remembered by Midland women as Miss Fisher who conducted a cooking school for the West Texas gas company here two years ago.

Miss Imogene Simmons of Crane City is visiting friends here today.

Buster Keaton and Good Cast Play at the Ritz Tuesday; Great Norma Shearer Film on

"Talking pictures," says Buster Keaton, "give the comedian ten times the material to work with, though he may not say more than two or three words in an entire production."

Keaton, who had just finished "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," his latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer comedy hit, coming Tuesday to the Ritz Theatre, had perhaps the longest speeches since he went into talkies in the new picture, because, he says, farce comedy in naturally more talkative than any other kind. But the biggest laughs in it, he insists, are those sequences in which only a few words are used, and the situation carries itself out.

Cites Example "For instance, explained Keaton, "I put Charlotte Greenwood out on a fire escape when I think she's been killed. Eddie Brophy, as the detective, comes in and wants to know where the body is. I get mixed up, point to another window and answer, 'On the fire escape.' He looks, 'There ain't no fire escape!' he bellows. 'I look surprised. Huh?' I remark, 'This is a basic reason behind that. The simple 'huh' sums up a whole train of agonized thought, terror and what not—and the audience is able to picture it for itself. In other words, in comedy it's best, not to tell the audience all about it, things up and draw its own conclusions. Instead of telling the audience that 'this is funny,' the comedian should do a thing and let the audience find out for itself that it's funny. I think this is the basic secret of real comedy."

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" gives many opportunities for this type of laughmaking. It is a broad farce comedy based on the famous stage hit, with Buster as a supposed gay Lothario in untold troubles with pretty women, a jealous husband and a pursuing detective.

And—about Norma Shearer, who is playing in an exceptionally strong picture at the Ritz today: Ursula Parrott must have Norma Shearer in mind when she creates heroines for her novels.

For in "Strangers May Kiss," as in "The Divorcee," Miss Shearer steps gracefully into the leading role and wraps it about her with a certain assurance of possession. Indeed, this reviewer can imagine the role in no other hands.

In the new Shearer picture which opened Sunday at the Ritz Theatre, the star essays an even more daring and dramatic role than in her previous Parrott story, this time playing the part of Lisbeth, the modern young woman who starts blithely out on a glob-trotting honeymoon without pausing for a wedding ring or any other ceremony than a burning kiss from her lover.

In this instance, the capable Neil Hamilton. Waiting for her to tire of the escapade is the devoted Robert Montgomery, again cast in a role similar to that of "The Divorcee," but greatly enlarged and filled with a characterization of strength and

BREEDER-FEEDER CONFERENCE WILL ADVERTISE CITY

Ranchers and farmers will have the most important conference of all the conferences held at Lubbock during the West Texas chamber of commerce convention May 14, 15 and 16, according to the set-up for the various conferences. The breeder-feeder conference will be held in the biggest assembly hall of the Hilton hotel.

The conference is in charge of Frank P. Holland Jr., president of the Texas Breeder-Feeder association and publisher of Farm and Ranch of Dallas. The meeting is resulting in wide publicity for Midland, as the conference secretary, a Midland man, has written an article dated in Midland which the West Texas chamber has already mailed to 186 Texas newspapers.

"I am an archaeologist," he said, "but since my adventures in the desert the parts which I want to explore are banned territories to me. I can't go to Egypt. The French won't allow me through any of their territory. Turkey won't have me."

"That is one reason why I refused decorations and other honors offered me," he continued. "Had I accepted them at the time they would have shut my mouth. By refusing them I was able to speak my mind. After a long struggle with cabinet ministers and other, I got the government, thanks to Winston Churchill, to fulfill as many promises made to the Arabs during the war as it was humanly possible and practicable to fulfill. Then it was I decided to give up all of which I was sick and tired and those who enter the R. A. F."

"There is no mystery about my life here. I live as public a life as it is possible to live. I am in barracks with other men. I sleep under the same roof with 10 of them. I eat with them. I perform my duties daily, as they do. I can be seen any time by anybody who takes the trouble to look at me. I am known to hundreds in the air force. In my hut we all know each other well."

"To begin with we all take our shirts off in the same place every morning. We soon find out all about one another. We soon know to whom we can lend a shilling and be sure to get it back. The life I led, I should say, is so public that one can hardly suggest that I am in some distant part of the world stirring up trouble."

"That is one reason why I chose

Grades in the West Texas high school band contest held Saturday in Abilene were received this morning, and show that Midland, in winning third place in Class B, made 81 2-10; Colorado, first place winner, made 81 6-10, Midland missing a tie for first place by only 4-10 of one point.

Those who heard the bands play said that Midland gave a better interpretation to mood and shaded tone far better than competitors. Intonation is believed to have lost for the band, however, as a baritone solo part had to be played on a saxophone.

Midland had the biggest band at the contest with the exception of Abilene and Wink. Midland had 50 musicians, Abilene 60 and Wink 54.

Five hundred band men took part in the contests which opened at 9:30 and continued until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. D. O. Wiley, director of the Cowboy band, had charge of arrangements. R. A. Dhossche, conductor of the Magonia band of Beaumont, was sole judge.
