Government in Business
Toy Pool Tables
The gubernatorial term
Painless taxes
By Duard E. Scott

The Midland chamber of commerce voted Monday night against aiding or abetting governmental interference in business. The vote came in reply to a request for the chamber's support of the farm relief bill now before congress.

Without considering the points for or against the relief bill as presented, it will do no harm to look closely at this "bogey"—the government in business.

In good times business likes to feel that it is self-contained and able to take care of itself. It wants all the credit for the prosperity. But when business gets itself into a jam by uncontrolled over-production, high-pressure selling and such similar short-sighted policies, its leaders go out in search of aid. About the only place they can go is to the government. They demand millions of dollars be loaned to them, they demand tariff barriers to protect their industries from foreign competition, they demand this and that. But after making loans, erecting tariff walls, and sometimes subsidizing this industry or that, Uncle Sam must keep his hand off the throttle. The same brilliant minds that put business where it is will continue to function. The government must go on permitting little Johnny play with matches and confine his efforts to quenching the fire he starts. That is called relief for business which is the sole purpose of the huge Reconstruction Finance corporation—and should not be confused with governmental interference.

And now that we find the farmer in perhaps a difficult situation in his business, we observe a phenomenon. Relief is relief, and nothing more, when applied to business; but when applied to agriculture, relief becomes governmental interference.

The farmer needs relief as bad or worse than industry ever needed it, and he needs it whether the plan under consideration is the best that could be devised, or is all that its opponents claim for it, the fact remains that the end is laudable and nobody has come forward with any better means of attaining that end.

It is to be suspected that those who utter the loudest protests against the farm allotment plan are those who are now reaping the most benefit from the unduly wide spread between the price the farmer receives for his product and the price the consumer pays.

INSULL—A SYMBOL

Samuel Insull, according to the decision of the Greek courts, need not come back to America to face trial unless he wants to; and when you get right down to it this decision probably squares with the realities of the situation about as well as any could.

To be sure, Insull played the game of frenzied finance high, wide and handsome and he lost; and, losing, he helped a lot of other people to lose too. But that he actually, at this stage of the game, deserves prosecution and imprisonment as a felon is perhaps open to question.

For Insull, after all, did no more than push his luck a little bit too far. He gambled that the depression was going to be a short one, and it turned out otherwise. If he had been right, the success magazines would be full of stories about his genius, his courage, his this, that and the other. He simply lacked his usual quota of luck.

All of this, of course, does not mean that the Insull failure, with all the ruin and misery it caused, is something we can laugh off easily. A very good share of our troubles today comes from precisely the sort of financial maneuvering by which Insull first built and then wrecked a fortune. But to pick Insull out as the lone scapegoat and demand that he be thrown forthwith into prison is stretching things a bit.

Insull, after all, was only a symbol—or, if you prefer, a symptom.

There were many others like him, back in those gilded boom years; there were many others like him during the dolorous years of collapse; there are many others like him today. The system under which he and they operated still exists. So far there has not been any overwhelming public demand for a drastic change in the now-you-see-it-now-you-don't method of building up holding companies, dummy operating machines, stock pyramids and the like.

It is the very essence of that system that a time of depression is apt to bring a collapse. Insull didn't invent the system, and as long as times were good we praised him as a wizard because of the way he worked it. To center all of our indignation on him, now, and let the system go untouched, is not quite fair.

THE CZAR'S COACHMAN

Book publishers in recent years seem to have given us the reminiscences of just about every literate survivor of the Russian revolution—among the nobility, at any rate. But it occurs to us that there is one more Russian whose memoirs might make interesting reading, and he is Nicolai Feodorovitch Trubetskoy, who used to be coachman for Czar Nicholas.

Trubetskoy, as you may have read, landed in a Moscow jail the other day for forging checks; and in that misadventure there is, apparently, a silent commentary on the changes the revolution has wrought on one of the least of Russia's citizens. This man's downfall was neither great nor spectacular, but it is clear that in some way the revolution managed to uproot him as completely as it did the nobles themselves. He carries with him, if we could get at it, a human and revealing story about what a social overturn can do to a lackey.

The Town Quack

Dick O'Brien, Baptist preacher from Colorado, came over here yesterday afternoon with Ralph Lee, laundryman of that city, who wanted to visit the editor of this paper and urge him to continue his policy of silence about what he knows on Lee for another ten years. O'Brien decided he would look up his friend, Winston Borum. He went straight to the golf course and was informed that the preacher hadn't been there all day. Fearing foul play, the visiting preacher notified a county official but later happened to think of inquiring at Borum's residence and found that the local pastor was out of town for the afternoon.

Doc Orson says he gets a lot of dogs to treat for various dog ailments. When he takes a dog in at his clinic, he always asks the name of the pooch. Doc said yesterday that he hadn't treated a dog yet named Rover or Fido, and a few years ago we didn't know there were any other dog names. If the dog was big, we named him Rover. If he was little, we named him Fido.

The registration of pedigreed animals has played a big part with the common everyday pooch. It also has made some transformation of the horse business, even in this country. There are men right here in town who will pay a good price for a horse whose ancestry is known but who won't buy an animal that looks

"NOT CONSTIPATED FOR SEVEN WEEKS"

Writes Mrs. Johnson After Using Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Sufferers from constipation will be interested in this unsolicited letter: "Your ALL-BRAN surely relieves constipation. I am so glad over the good it has done me that I feel I must write and tell you of it. "For lunch I take a banana, a large one. Six tablespoons of ALL-BRAN in a sauce dish, and dip banana at each bite until all is consumed. I haven't been constipated now for seven weeks."—Mrs. Louise Johnson, 1433 Forest Street, Denver, Colorado. Constipation often causes headaches, loss of appetite and energy, sleeplessness. This condition is usually due to lack of "bulk" to exercise the intestines, and vitamin B to further promote regular habits. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN has both, as well as iron for the blood. The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. Within the body, it forms a soft mass. Gently, it clears out the wastes. Try ALL-BRAN in place of patent medicines—often harmful. Two tablespoonfuls daily will overcome most types of constipation. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor. Use as a cereal, or in cooking. Recipes on the red-and-green package. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Foster Is Given Pardon by Gov.

ARTSSIA, N. M.—Luhter Foster, one of the principals in Eddy county's most sensational murder case, is a free man by virtue of a New Year's pardon issued by Governor Arthur Seligman. He qualified for clemency by his long term in the state prison with a clean record.

Foster together with William Archer, known as Cottonwood Bill and Mrs. Katherine Halsey, was convicted of killing Fred Halsey, Hope rancher in 1924. The case was concluded at Roswell in the Chaves county court on charge of venue from Eddy county. The trial was the longest and most spectacular of any case of record in this county. Fred Halsey, Hope rancher, was killed at the Halsey ranch, near church with his family on the night of March 30, 1924.

Halsey was killed as he got out of his car to open the gate at his home. He was shot at close range. In prosecuting the defendants, the state contended that it was Archer, who fired the shot from a shot gun, as result of a conspiracy between Foster and Mrs. Halsey. The gun, a 16-gauge double barrel shot gun, was later located in an upland tank near the Halsey home, through revelation of a dream by A. J. Harvell of Cisco, who was visiting here at the time of the murder.

It developed during the trial that Archer, a resident of the Cottonwood community, had never seen Halsey, but went to the Halsey ranch a week before the shooting to locate his man.

Trial of this case cost Eddy county $7,244.94. Later history of the case reveals that the state supreme court ordered the sentences of Luther Foster and William Archer commuted to life. Mrs. Halsey was granted a new trial, the case being tried in Curry county and was sentenced to life imprisonment by Carl A. Hatch. The conviction was reversed because Judge Hatch permitted the transcript of the testimony of Zack Teal to be read to the jury. Teal disappeared soon after the Chaves county trial and has never been heard of since that time. Reports that Teal died, could not be confirmed. Mrs. Halsey has been at liberty, somewhere in the United States for several years, but will probably never be brought to trial. Thus ends the most dramatic chapter ever written in the court records of Eddy county.

"NO MORE O"

JUST WHAT HAPPENED

When Ann Holt arrives on board the giant transatlantic liner that has been waiting for her for several hours, soaking wet, Tony Gage lends his services to carry her to her cabin. He leaves her there unceremoniously with her grandmother, Ann, who recently announced her engagement with Prince Carlos, and thereby fulfilling a wish of her grandfather, Jerome Cedric, an extremely wealthy man, decides that she has taken a liking to Tony and proceeds to chase him. Tony, who is connected with her grandfather's lawyers, does not intend to be an episode to brighten up the voyage to New York for her, and tells her so when she corners him in the ship's gymnasium.

Ann affected a Southern dialect. "Mighty cool out here, Colonel." She put her arm around him as if to lead.

"Ho! in there," Tony murmured. Ann affected a Southern dialect. "Mighty cool out here, Colonel." She put her arm around him as if to lead.

"I'll do the leading, thank you," he said.

Ann became very conversational. "You know, I have a queer feeling—you and I have danced like this before—all alone on the deck of a ship."

"We have," Tony unexpectedly replied. "We did years ago on our honeymoon."

Ann was truly surprised. "Huh? Pardon me, but the sea is rather noisy tonight." She cupped her ear and Tony repeated very loudly, "I said—on our honeymoon!"

Ann nodded sagely. "Oh of course. Or course—my wretched memory of faces—"

Tony interrupted her. "Well, it was such a brief honeymoon. The marriage took place too soon after our meeting."

"Would you refresh my memory as to where we met?" she asked.

"On the society pages of the rotogravure section—where I first saw your picture."

"And so we were married," Ann mused. "Were we—a she asked softly.
