AT LAST, A PLAN

Say what you will about Mr. Roosevelt's scheme for power development, reforestation and agricultural reclamation in the Tennessee valley, it is at least a comprehensive and ambitious long-range plan—and, as such, it comes to a bewildered country very much like a breath of cool fresh air.
When the Civil war was at its darkest hour, and the northern armies were being wasted over and over because a competent leader could not be found, there was a popular cry, "Abraham Lincoln, give us a man!" We are in something like that mood today, only we are asking for a plan rather than a man.
We want someone to outline a program for us; a big program, one big enough to require all our strength and all our energy, one big enough, even, to be a little bit risky.
We have, in fact, just about reached the point where even a very bad plan would look better to us than no plan at all. We have drifted long enough, and it has become pretty clear that our troubles are not going to settle themselves. To have a far-reaching program mapped out is greatly refreshing—in spite of the fact that this particular program contains things which many of us will be unable to agree whole-heartedly.

In some ways one of the most dismaying aspects of the depression has been the kind of paralysis that has rested on the American spirit. We have been timid about trying to start anything. Our energy has slumbered. Yet that old energy and spirit are not dead. The nation that grew a little more than a century from a few scattered colonies to one of the world's greatest empires has not declined into senility. The force that dug the Erie canal, threw railways across the Rockies, lifted the New York skyscrapers and built the mills of Detroit and Gary and Birmingham still exists. It only needs to be put to work.

And now, at last, we are offered a plan—a big one. It may not be the best plan possible; it may even be a very bad one. But it is at least something definite and far-reaching. Simply to have it offered is in the highest degree encouraging.

BEACHING OUR ADMIRALS

The retirement from naval service of Rear Admirals Jehu V. Chase and Frank H. Schofield on account of age brings to mind the seemingly harsh features of the navy's very strict retirement rules.
Naval regulations require an officer to leave the service at the end of the month in which he becomes 64. Admiral Chase and Admiral Schofield both celebrated their sixtieth birthdays in January; both, as a result, are now in civilian clothes.

Everything considered, some such rule as this is probably necessary. At the very least it keeps the navy from being overloaded at the top with a bunch of superannuated old dugouts. And yet 64 is an early retirement age. A naval officer of that age can be just at the height of his powers. It seems a bit unjust to put him ashore, sometimes.

WHAT'S A DOG WORTH?

Because an ordinary wire-haired terrier is dead, a Chicago lady has sued a neighbor for $500. The neighbor, she charges, killed her dog, and she wants fairly substantial damages.
And this, of course, brings up the puzzling little question, What is a dog worth? Is $500 a large sum or a small one? What compensation should an owner get under such circumstances, anyway?
The way you'll answer those questions probably depends on whether you yourself have ever owned and loved a dog. If you haven't, the $500 this lady asks will look rather high. If you have, you're apt to wonder why she didn't sue for a good deal more.

I've seen women like Tennyson's brook. They babble forever.

There's one kind of person you don't see any more—the pretty woman who breezed into town, called together a few leading lights who underwrote the chaquetra for fifty bucks apiece, and breezed out again.

Our staff members have been subjected to a severe deal of scrutiny since the paragraph I had about the head of one of our bunch looking like a Valentine. I'm not sure whether unanimous sentiment has selected any one of us yet, but a few remarks were made that certain of the bunch, when viewed from the back of the head, looked like heads of cabbage, walking cans, tin cans, cups and peanuts. I'd about as soon look like a Valentine.

Up at Amarillo, they are talking about how the winters are getting longer and colder. One Amarillo man asked another, "What you going to do this summer?"

"On the way home?" asked a friend.
"All the way home," Pete replied.

Arthur Yeager got home the other day just in time to hear his wife tell the oldest boy to quit playing.

Debt Burden on Increase While Relief Pushed

By RODNEY DUTCHER
WASHINGTON—The vast burden of debt now worries us, individually and nationally and congressionally, more than any other aspect of the depression.
Some of us have been engulfed in this great sea of liabilities. Others are going down for the third time or are in it up to the neck. Many of us have only wet feet.
Farmers, revealing a grim earnest against seizure of their farms for debt, have dramatized the great national dilemma. But the $9,000,000,000 of farm mortgages is only a small part of the national debt, estimated $20,000,000,000 of individual, corporate and public debt.

Every man, woman and child is involved. Anyone who supposes that he doesn't owe money is respectfully reminded of his share in the $35,000,000,000 or more of national, local and state debt. Each adult's average is nearly $500 and although payment won't be suddenly demanded, each of us is paying interest on public debt in billions of dollars through visible or invisible taxation.
Whereas all of us are debtors, millions of us are also creditors. Anyone who owns a bond, a stock, a bank deposit or an insurance policy is a creditor. Creditors profit when they collect interest and principal in dollars worth $1.65 as compared with 1929, but many have suffered through defaults and collapses of property, security and other values.

"National Insolventy"
The big, dark fact about our debts is that they were largely contracted in the days of high prices and high incomes. Now the debts remain and both the national wealth on which they were based and the income with which they were to be paid have so fallen that a large proportion of the debt and its charges simply can't be met. We hear of "national insolventy" and Senator Borah says the national income measured against the demands of taxes and interest, is practically zero.

About 700,000 property foreclosures have been made within three years and in the last six years one farmer in every 10 has lost his farm. Railroads are at the crisis. Pressure on nearly all types of debts is intensified.
With action demanded, congress is paving the way to speed measures for debtor relief. A bi-partisan agreement on unprecedented legislation has been reached in a desperate effort to get action in the present short session.
Governors and legislatures are acting. Moratorium talk is in the air. The federal government considers converting billions of bonds to lower interest. Big life insurance companies holding $2,000,000,000 in farm mortgages, promise to postpone foreclosures in western states. In New York, where there is $8,000,000,000 in mortgages, a strong movement begins to cut real estate mortgage interest 4 per cent.

Wells to Describe National Capital

"In the National Museum at Washington, D. C., there are 13 million objects and no one man has seen them all. If a person were to spend a minute on each object during each eight hour working day, it would take him 74 years to complete the job," says Carvel Wells, Continental Oil Company radio commentator, who will devote his register Wednesday night broadcast on February 22 to the nation's capital.
An unusual feature of the program, which will be broadcast over 23 N.B.C. stations, will be the introduction of the ghost of Pierre L'Enfant, French engineer in the American Revolutionary army, who first conceived the present day arrangement of Washington's streets and buildings. Many other interesting facts concerning America's most beautiful city and its residents are included.

CATTLE FEEDING RAISES PRICE

COLLEGE STATION—If all cattle feeders in Texas did as well last year as the 1516 men and boys who fed out 71,919 head by demonstration methods, they increased the sale price of their home raised feed 30 per cent, and are likely to repeat the gains again this year, declare livestock specialists in the extension service at Texas A. and M. college.

There are not as many cattle on feed this winter as last but there are practically as many on feed in cooperation with county farm demonstration agents as last year. This represents about half of all cattle being fed.

Cattle feeding today is not the speculative game it once was, but is a plan many farmers are using to sell their feed specialists point out. Net profits from feeding have remained about the same for the last two years, demonstration records reveal, and extension service men do not expect them to vary greatly when the cattle are sold this spring.

Demonstration cattle sold in the spring of 1931 returned an average of $3.50 per head for labor and investment, and the crop sold in the spring of 1932 averaged $4.50 per head in return on labor and investment. Expressing this return in terms of an increased price for the home grown feed, about 30 per cent was added to the value of this feed each of these years by selling it through the cattle. The margin obtained in feeding operations is generally regarded as a fair offset for the labor.

One of the features of last year's feeding was the large increase in creep feeding of calves. Of the men and boys who fed cattle in cooperation with county agents, 18 per cent creep fed their calves, which represented 23 per cent of all calves fed by demonstration methods. Creep feeding is a new way of inducing quick and early growth in calves by providing young calves grain and cottonseed meal and hay in creeps accessible to their mothers. The calves learn to eat while nursing and grazing, and usually go into the feed lots out-weighting other calves about 100 pounds. This added gain is produced at very low cost. Creep fed calves also go on feed in the lot more quickly and make better gains.

Four-H club boys outstripped all others last season in net returns per calf, with average returns for labor and investment of $20.27. This was possible through premium prices so many obtained in auction rings at livestock shows.
