New Passenger Plane Shrinks U. S. a Third

A speedier new era in transcontinental air travel is expected through development of the "flying panatela" plane, above. The plane, developed after tests with a U. S. bomber, has a cruising range of 165 miles an hour with 10 passengers and crew. It can hit a top speed, without wind help, of 182 miles an hour, a little better than three miles a minute. Sixty such planes, their two motors built into the low wings, now are being constructed for transcontinental service. The chart below shows how the planes would cut one-third of the time now required between San Francisco and New York.

After a brief altercation, details of which were not made clear, Ed King, negro, stabbed F. E. Sims, negro, to death in the negro section of town last night. Carrie White, negro woman, in whose place the murder happened, told officers King knocked at the back door of her house and asked to see the negro, who was sitting in the room with her. The two principals to the killing went into a front room and for a brief period their low voices, engaged evidently in a quarrel, were heard. The conversation was interrupted by a scream and witnesses opened the door to find the negro lying on the floor, fatally stabbed in several places. King ran through the negro quarter to the Mexican section and thence to the court house, where he surrendered to a sheriff's deputy.

Eighteen Months to Rebuild a Nation

WASHINGTON, April 2.—Within 18 months the Roosevelt administration must rebuild the shattered economic structure of the nation or lose control of the legislative machinery. In spite of the overwhelming democratic majority of the present house every political observer agrees that control of that body will be lost at the next election unless the sweeping program launched by Roosevelt succeeds in restoring prosperity.

Mayor States Thanks For Election to Third Term

Upon the heels of official reports establishing him mayor of Midland for his third consecutive term, Leon Goodman issued a statement of appreciation to those who supported his candidacy and a pledge to devote himself even more closely to affairs of the city.

In an interview he said he had no wish to "perpetuate" himself in office and that, barring "an emergency making my candidacy a distinct obligation to the people," he would not again be a candidate for mayor.

The statement, in detail, read: "I wish to express my appreciation to all who supported me, especially to those who conducted my campaign.

"I am rather gratified that, in the main, there were no unnecessary personal elements so often infused into politics.

"It is my intention, subject to proper confirmation by the council, to continue to maintain my office in the city hall during this term, in order to be closer to supervision of the operations of the city and to be more available to the people of Midland and to expedite hearing of such problems as they present to the city.

"As to taxes, there is no question but that the city is operating on the most economic basis and that when all the people are in a position to pay their taxes the city's tax load will be drastically reduced.

"There have been reports that the debt of the city has been increasing, but such reports are absolutely false. Figures given in a recent poll of advertisements showing material reductions are true statements.

"An independent audit of the books of the city has already been ordered by the council and this report when completed will be available to every resident and be given proper publicity.

"Financial affairs are in excellent condition, few cities of Texas reflecting those of Midland.

"I wish that every resident of Midland be assured I feel, as their mayor, responsible for doing all that is possible for their betterment regardless of whether they supported me in the campaign just completed.

"I will be just as available to those who supported other candidates as to those who brought about my election.

"I sincerely hope that all, whatever ticket they supported, will enlist their energies in support of the administration to the end that the greatest good for the greatest number may be accomplished.

"The people may be assured there is no intention on my part to perpetuate myself in office and, unless there is an emergency making my candidacy a distinct obligation to the people, I will under no consideration again be a candidate for mayor. In fact, it was due only to the seriousness of the times and the possibility of a crisis that I announced my candidacy this year."

SURVIVORS MAY BE ALIVE, SAYS A LATE REPORT

Plans for Investigation Proceed Steadily

WASHINGTON, April 5. (UP).—Search was stirred today by a statement of navy department aeronautical experts that some survivors of the Akron disaster possibly were alive. It was believed possible that a large section of the craft is drifting with men aboard.

Clear weather aided the scouting planes and ships.

The body of Lieut. Commander Harold Earle MacLellan, 37, was found, the only one accounted for since the original four rescued early yesterday.

The house naval affairs committee voted a thorough investigation of the disaster, including the past history of the Akron and rumors of sabotage during its construction. A sub-committee was making inquiry. Chairman Delaney also will probe the crash of the rescue blimp that killed two.

Delaney was "by no means convinced" that the disaster meant the end of the dirigible as a naval weapon. Chairman Vinson of the house naval affairs committee inaugurated a naval building program to place the fleet in full strength according to terms of the London treaty. He predicted a rank of fifth place in the world unless building is carried out.

COMMANDER WILEY TELLS GRIM STORY

NEW YORK, April 5.—"Stand by for a crash!" This did Lieut. Commander H. V. Wiley cry out to shipmates on the Akron, as the giant dirigible plunged toward the sea.

In a tattered bathrobe, with a pair of borrowed pajamas on his tall, bulky figure, the second in command of the giant navy dirigible stood on the steps of the U. S. Naval hospital in Brooklyn late Tuesday and recounted the night of storm and terror that apparently brought death to 73 of his shipmates.

No Fire Aboard In what he termed "my own interview," the lieutenant commander emphatically said in his opinion, the Akron was not struck by lightning, and added there was no fire aboard the craft. There was a possibility, he said, the ship was struck by lightning without his knowledge "as there was plenty of lightning all around us."

The officer was calm as he talked. The lobby of the hospital was filled with patients and attendants as he related his views of the tragedy.

"We left Lakehurst at about 7:30 p. m. on a regularly scheduled flight," he related. "One object of the flight was to calibrate radio direction finding stations in New England."

About 8:35 o'clock, when 20 miles south of Philadelphia, lightning was seen ahead, and in a few minutes we had reports of a thunderstorm over Washington.

Group Obscured "We headed east and northeast toward the ocean, flying at about 1,600 feet. The ground was obscured by fog, but we knew our position quite accurately and occasionally we would sight lights indicating a town which checked our course.

The ship was in good flying condition, although slightly heavy. The lightning to the south became quite extensive and also appeared in the west.

"I don't think the ship was hit by lightning as there was no indication of this at any time, although there was plenty of lightning around us.

er the next election depends therefore on the success of the program enacted at this session. Should the farm legislation restore a reasonable measure of prosperity to the farmers and if employment can be found for the bulk of the unemployed, of course, the next congress will be more overwhelmingly democratic than this one.

The time limit is too short for so great a task, but nevertheless, the people will condemn or approve on the results of the next 18 months.

As a usual thing an administration has four years in which to put into effect some one proposed policy and even if it failed the blame could ordinarily be shifted to the opposition party.

This administration must meet and solve a whole army of problems. To successfully solve any one of such problems as banking, farming, transportation or unemployment would be a major achievement for any administration in normal times, and it would be expected to consume four years in accomplishing the result.

But the logic of events compels this administration to attack all of these problems simultaneously. The banking situation cannot be permanently sound without business recovery, the farm legislation cannot succeed unless labor is employed, and at good wages, the transportation situation cannot be cured by any isolated treatment, and unemployment waits on all these other industries.

That was why all thought of a congressional recess was abandoned in the early days of this session.

That is why the president must continue to submit to congress in rapid succession the separate parts of his program. A partial program would be doomed to failure. That is also why the administration so tenaciously adheres to the original drafts of the submitted bills.

Take for instance the farm bill. Much against the wishes of the administration, the sheep and cattle men have succeeded in having sheep (See HOGAN, Page 4)

TOM MOONEY'S NEW TRIAL

So Tom Mooney is at last to have his day in court! What the upshot of this surprising new development in this famous long-drawn-out case may be is beyond telling. That it will be next to impossible for the prosecution to gain a conviction seems obvious; but whether such a result would bring a pardon for the charge on which the man is now in prison is not at all certain.

It would be well, meanwhile, for friends of the prisoner to remember that right now they can do him more harm than good. By keeping his case alive they have done him a great service; by agitating too fervently, now that he has won a victory, they can—so perverse is human nature—cause a revulsion of feeling that would make his release more improbable than it was before.

The Reporter-Telegram presents this serialization of "Rasputin and the Empress," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture version of the dramatic fall of the Romanoff family, starring the three Barymores: Ethel, John and Lionel. Yesterday we left Rasputin just as his servant announced the arrival of Prince Paul at the monk's flat.

CHAPTER TWELVE
Rasputin stood in the dimly lit kitchen of his flat facing the door, an oil lamp on the table before him throwing a little pool of light and great swelling shadows. Within the embrace of these shadows, two men crouched by the wall against the door. Rasputin looked at them, studied their arrangements for his safety.

"Hev, you on the right," he grumbled, "move back. You can be seen." Suddenly the guard edged over into a deeper shadow. On the stairs, they could hear the rapid beat of Prince Chegodeff's feet.

Rasputin opened the door. He took the lamp from the table and held it so that it lighted the gloomy stairway, damp and foul with badly set plaster.

"Can you see all right?" he called down with great cordiality. There was a grunt in reply. "Look out for that broken step," Rasputin cautioned. "Every time I get a nose full of vodka I go head over heels on that step."

"Look at my elbow from last night," Rasputin said. "I'm not interested in your anatomy," Paul replied.

Rasputin set the lamp down on the table and stood before him so that his own shadow would hide the two men crouched by the doorway. With a peasant's craftiness, he changed his manner on perceiving Paul's extremely hostile look.

"Well, you must be interested in something to honor my humble home in this way," he said. "My business is quickly over. Some time ago, I told you about progress, you remember?"

"Murder?" Rasputin asked, and then laughed. "Progress," Paul repeated and drew from his pocket a heavy service revolver.

"For the flicker of a second, Rasputin looked at the ugly muzzle of the weapon, then up into Paul's determined eyes. Then he shouted out: "Ivan! Dimitri! Stephen!"

The door burst open and a secret service officer flung himself into the room. From the dark corners where they had been hiding the two guards threw themselves on Paul. Before they could grapple with him, he fired twice, point blank, at the monk. The guards seized him. He stood quietly, staring at Rasputin, who had fallen back a step, but was laughing heartily. He could not have missed at that range. And yet, to his amazement, neither of the two heavy slugs that he had fired seemed to have had any effect whatsoever. Outside in the hall he could hear the hysterical outcries of women, commotion. Evidently the two shots had been heard. There was a pounding on the door. Sebastian, whom Prince Paul had recognized as one of the Tsar's secret service guards, locked the door. The two other guards seized Prince Paul by the arms. He shook himself free.

Kills 92 Rattlesnakes in a Day

PENWELL--The spring of the year is here and along with it snake yarns, one of the surest signs of the change of the seasons, is right along with it. Recently at Judkins and an employee of the Phillips Petroleum company there, went out in quest of nothing but rattlesnakes. Evidently, they knew their snakes, for the afternoon's hunt netted them 92 of the buzz bugs, some small, of course, and likewise some big ones. The snakes were all located near Penwell.

godieff knows that now."
Dunja hurried herself savagely at Prince Paul. The two men who had held him fended her off.
"Who raised his hand against the Anointed One?" she screamed. "I'll tear the eyes out!"
Paul looked contemptuously at her and then at Rasputin, and turned toward the doorway. Immediately the secret service man who had been set to guard Rasputin stepped forward to block the way.
"Stand back," Paul said to him. "Any time that you want me I will be at my quarters in the barracks of the Chevalier Guard."
The man nodded and let him pass. At the head of the stairs he turned and faced Rasputin.
"Next time," he said coldly, "I shall fire at your head."
Rasputin merely laughed.
As he left, Rasputin's disciples poured into the room. News of the attempted assassination had been given to them by Dunja.
"Assassin! Murderer!" they were shouting. "Come back here and see what happens!"
Paul went calmly down the stairs, Rasputin, putting on an air of intense piety, stretched forward his hands to calm his people.
"Never mind him," he said in the tone of one forgiving his enemies. "A miracle has happened. Let us be grateful for a miracle."
The disciples struggled back into the dining room. One voice was raised in a hymn, and soon other voices joined him. Soon the sound of "Hallelujah!" was echoing through the apartment. Rasputin grinned, shut the door, bolted it, and turned to Dunja.
It was with an air of concern that he addressed her.
"Dunja, help me off with this coat."
She helped him off with the long caftan. Beneath it was an armor plate vest. In the thick steel over the heart was a deep dent.
"Are you hurt?" Dunja asked anxiously.
"Not a scratch," he said, and then added, grinning. "But this was a good idea—en, Dunja."
Rasputin took off the heavy vest and put it carefully away in the cupboard.
"I am afraid, Grischka," the old and cattle stricken from the bill which the senate committee will report Monday.

That throws out of balance the whole farm plan. The price of hogs cannot be maintained with sheep and cattle eliminated. One of the major purposes of the bill is to secure a profitable market for almost three billion bushels of corn grown each year in the United States. Very little of that corn is marketed direct so the only way to fix prices on it is through fixing the price of the animals which consume it.
Any material increase in the price of pork without a corresponding increase in beef and mutton will result in a greatly reduced consumption of pork. As the bill is written, whenever such a decrease becomes evident in the consumption of any commodity by comparison with competing commodities the secretary will remove such commodity from the operation of the law. If it so happens that it becomes necessary to eliminate the corn growers from the benefits of the law then its future success will be in doubt.
John E. Elliott, J. Edward Jones and the others who bolted the oil conference a week ago claim to have succeeded in delaying it not permanently defeating the plan of the committee of fifteen.
It is very evident that they have delayed action here. They appear to be working for congressional investigation and members of congress are receiving letters and telegrams protesting against the recommendations of the conference. The next few days will determine whether any action is to be taken on the resolutions adopted at the governors' conference.
After all the administration must decide whether to approve or not the policy of proration. The facts in regard to production are all in the government's possession, so it can easily be proved whether there has been an overproduction.
In the meantime, the small producers and royalty owners as well as nearly all others in the business suffer from a totally inadequate price.
Believe it or not, there were men at the meeting seriously arguing it would be a good thing for the country generally if oil went to five cents a barrel. They contended that the five cent oil would capture the oil market of Europe.
What we would want it for at that price is a little difficult to understand.

Akron Crash

"We continued east for about an hour and then reversed the course. When we reached land again we saw lights and identified the shore line. This was about midnight. The course was changed to southeast. About half an hour later the ship began to descend rapidly from 1,600 feet. I dropped all the ballast forward. The fall was stopped at about 800 feet. We rose rapidly and leveled off again at 1500 feet.
Engines at Full Speed
"While we were falling, the engines were pushed to full speed. After we gained our altitude again they were changed to standard speed. Three minutes later the air became turbulent all around us and the ship tossed violently.
"I knew we were near the center of the storm, because air in the center is most turbulent. I called all hands to the landing stations so as to have all of them available and not in their bunks.
"The ship took a sharp lurch and the rudder control of the upper rudder were carried away. I unclutched the upper rudder and tried to steer with the lower rudder.
"I was on the right side of the control car and supervising the rudder. Commander McCord was on the left side of the car and supervising the elevator wheel. The elevator man reported the ship was falling rapidly.
"I heard a report at 800 feet. By this time the nose inclined upward about 20 degrees, but the ship was falling quite rapidly. In the fog nothing outside could be seen.
Asked for Altitude
"I asked for altitude and the answer was 300 feet. I ordered 21 hands to stand by for a crash. That order was rung up to the engine car and almost immediately we hit the water.

Less Noise in City

When NBC technicians required authentic street noises as a background for a recent Magic Carpet dramatization they conscientiously recorded traffic sounds at several of New York's busiest thoroughfares. Later, when the record they had made was played back in the studio, they found it produced a low indeterminate rumble without any of the distinguishing effects necessary for radio use.
The search for noises incidental to street traffic in motion continued. A few days later the engineers burst into the studios triumphant. They had found their city noises in what is ordinarily considered a quiet little suburban district just outside New York.
When this record was played, strange to say, it contained all the requisites of a composite traffic recording—the rumble of trucks, automobile horns, the policeman's whistle and a score of other incidental noises, thus unofficially proving that perhaps traffic in New York proper is less noisy than in some of its allegedly "quiet" rural communities.

Fowl Watched to Find a Location

PIXLEY, Calif. (UP).—A gold hunt, with chickens and turkeys doing the actual searching, was on here today following the discovery of several good-sized nuggets in a turkey's gizzards.
The turkey, according to its owner, George Smith, a poultryman, was raised locally where it found the gold was a mystery, as no gold was known to exist near here.
Several ducks sent from here to the Los Angeles market also were reported to have had grains of gold and small nuggets in their gizzards.
Poultrymen of the district were keeping close watch on their fowl's feeding grounds as a result.
The most intense concentration of artillery fire in history was during the Battle of St. Mihiel during the World war when more than 1,000,000 artillery shells were fired in four hours.

Royal Entertainment

BIG SPRING—The Frank Martin post No. 185, together with the women auxiliary is planning to entertain in royal fashion the guests attending the 16th district American legion meeting, which convenes here at 10 o'clock on Saturday, April 15, and lasting through April 16. During the two day session there will be plenty of entertainment mixed with business. Included in the entertainment program will be golf, trap shooting, dancing and luncheons.
A business session will be held at 9:30 p. m., followed by an address of welcome by Leiland Martin, the officer said. "I remembered seeing him there quite frequently. Then, in a few minutes before the impact, I didn't remember seeing him," Wiley was asked if he saw Commander McCord after the crash and said: "I was washed out his window. He may have gone out ahead of me."

What's the Value of a TRADE-MARK? TODAY the Chesterfield trade-mark is very valuable. Back of it is the good will of thousands—perhaps hundreds of thousands—of smokers. Chesterfield cigarettes were first manufactured more than twenty-five years ago. At the start, they were sold at a loss, but the quantity sold increased steadily from year to year, until now Chesterfields are sold in great volume at a very small percentage of profit. The Chesterfield trade-mark, as indicated above, is registered in the United States Patent Office. This means that the United States Government says that only Chesterfield may use this trade-mark for cigarettes. This is not only for our protection, but for yours as well, because what the Chesterfield trade-mark really means is that you and all Chesterfield smokers will get Chesterfields manufactured under the same formula, by the same people, and in all respects absolutely the same, in every package you buy, year in and year out. Wherever you buy them, in this or in any other country, you can depend upon the Chesterfield trade-mark. They're Milder... They Taste Better — Chesterfield
