THE FREEDOM WE SEEK HAS BECOME ECONOMIC

A great shift in the popular idea of freedom, which will ultimately have a very great effect on our political thought, has been taking place in this country during the last few years.

This shift has been moving us away from our traditional notions at a rapid pace. It is giving a new twist to the things we demand from our government, and it is steadily changing our concept of the relation of the individual to the society of which he is a part.

Briefly, the shift can be explained by saying that we are beginning to demand economic freedom rather than political freedom.

Once we demanded freedom from the oppression of rulers—freedom to talk, write, and worship as we pleased, abolition of inherited caste distinctions, formal recognition of the fact that, as far as rights are concerned, all men are created equal.

Now we are beginning to demand freedom from economic disabilities; freedom from poverty, for instance, and from the fear of poverty.

We are beginning to insist that political equality be balanced with economic security.

It is this demand which is back of such pending bills in Congress as the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance law and the Connery 30-hour week bill.

Now the thing to notice is that never before, in all the world's history, could a demand for economic security have been made sensibly.

In all former times it was inevitable that insecurity be the lot of the average man. There simply wasn't enough of everything to go around. Somebody had to be Population, as Malthus pointed out, tended to increase faster than the means of subsistence. Poverty was inescapable.

But today our troubles come because there is too much of everything. For the first time since this old planet started spinning, every man can get a fair whack of things. Insecurity is no longer necessary. The abolition of poverty is perfectly possible.

The ordinary man has come to realize this. He knows there is enough of everything to go around and he wants his share; and—which is a point worth remembering—he doesn't care very much how he gets it.

FACTS MUST BE KNOWN

If a member of President Roosevelt's official family is actually working toward a Communist state in America and is pulling the wool over the president's eyes so that the nation can be maneuvered to the edge of Marxism without realizing it, the fact needs to be established definitely and the man's name should be published. - And then the man needs to be thrown out of Washington so fast that he won't know what hit him.

But, on the other hand, if none of this is true—i someone has just been indulging in a lot of loose talk, creating a bogey-man out of nothing to scare us out of adopting a law or a set of laws which certain important gentlemen do not like-then the man who started all the talk needs to be shown up as an irresponsible rumormonger and discredited forever.

The charges spread before the House Commerce Committee in the letter read by James Henry Rand Jr. must be investigated quickly and thoroughly. The public has a right to know the exact facts in the matter.

Fifteen thousand, out of more than ten million, voted against Mussolini's candidates in his recent plebiscite. They immediately went into hiding.

Then he was gone and Mary went back to Aunt Hetty. She rang for a servant.
"Turn on all the lights—build up the fire—it is chilly here. And how about some champagne, Aunt Hetty?" "Never was a better suggestion," answered the older woman. Ther when the servant had left, she gave Mary a long, knowing look. Al

Mary's reserve went down before it.

"I love him," she said. "And he was very much is love with me."

"And still is?"

"Sometimes I wonder. Oh I've nothing to complain of. I'm not the neglected wife. I know there is no other woman in the world as far as Philip goes. It's just that I don't seem to amuse him any more—he's like the conductor of an orchestra like the conductor of an orchestra in a theatre, who doesn't laugh at the poor comedian's jokes any more I say something I think is funny and he doesn't laugh and I get all muddled up. Then I want to cry more than I want to laugh. I've muddled up. Then I want to cry more than I want to laugh. I've developed an unconscious fear of displeasing him."

"Hurrah for you for admitting it," said Aunt Hetty. "Because I see a great light. I'm taking you off to Cannes with me."

"Silence," roared Aunt Hetty. "You are one of us gay ones of the earth—at least you were. If you go on this way, you won't be gay or anything else—you'll just go to seed. It's the best thing that could have happened, Philip's going away like this." She went over to the bell rope and when the servant answered, ordered him to send Lady Mary's maid at once.

"Tell her what you want packed," she said. "I won't take any 'no' from you. I'll put off going until tomorrow but no longer. That will give you time to give orders about the house and Pamela—and not enough to think up any objections to going. We're off to the sumny Riviera. And you're going to have the time of your life."

She did not know she was telling the truth—but that the time was to be of a kind she would never have imagined in her wildest dreams.

That shower about getting-uptime this morning was the right way to start off a day. I walked to fown and actually saw people who could smile. A lot of business men have forced their smiles so long that the grins have become mechanical—sort of like the "grin and bear it" kind.
But the smiles I saw this morning were genuine.

CHAPTER IV

The trip to Cannes was a delight to Mary. Even crossing the Channel when it was choppier than usual, was a joy. Lady Hetty was a marwhen it was choppier than usual, was a joy. Lady Hetty was a marvelous traveling companion. It was impossible for any moment to be dull when she was around.

Here's a funny story I clipped about weather in the Panhandle: A panhandle fellow died and went to heave here here.

"Do you know, Aunt Hetty," said Mary giving her a swift kiss, "you're much younger than I am."

"Because I am wise. I know I was meant to be gay and so I do whatever I feel like doing. But you're coming back to the fold, dear. You'll be positively wild in a day or two—and then, what a time we are going to have."

But even she, whose chief joy in life was shocking conventional society, might have sent Mary back to London, then and there, if she had ondon, then and there, if she had nown just what lay ahead of them. Their suite was a beautiful one and Mary, who had never been in the south of France before, was enchanted with the view of the Medi therranean from their balcony and the colorful life on the beach.

"I could just sit here forever and look at it," she said to Aunt Hetty.

"Sit!" scoffed Lady Hetty. "You can do that in London. We didn't come here to look at scenery. We're "Sit!" scoffed Lady Hetty. "You can do that in London, We didn't come here to look at scenery. We're going to be a part of it. Come on. We're off to join the gang at the merriest, noisiest bar in all the world at there—and take my word for it, I know them all. There's enough to look at there—and plenty of drinks thrown in."

Aunt Hetty's popularity was proved by the shouts of welcome and Joy which greeted them when they entered the bar. Her first glance told Mary that the place was all Joy which greeted them when they entered the bar. Her first glance told Mary that the place was all Joy which greeted them when they entered the bar. If ycu are getting into the early middle-age you look like an old man to the youth of 18. A friend of mine told this story today:

"Some young people were out at my house the other night and were having a big time, in their carefully studied sophistication. I wasn't intending to eavesdrop but I heard one boy refer to somebody as an old buzzard. I thought it was meant to be gay and so I do whatever I feel like doing. But

THAT ELUSIVE DOLLAR BILL

Have you ever noticed how, when you place a few dollar bills in your pocket and go about your business, those bills fade out so fast that you rack your brain to see where they went thinking probably that you lost one or two of them?

A little change in your pocket is a convenience but, to keep a record of the comings and goings of those dollar bills, maintain a checking account. You know when your bills have been paid. You know what you paid for the things you bought while shopping. You know where those elusive dollar bills went. Your account, large or small, is welcome here.

Marlo and LeFors With Tidwell Shows

Sensational daredevils, who will thrill the T. J. Tidwell show patrons during their six day engagement here opening Pagoda pool. The LeFors and Marlo act especially meets with public approval from two standpoints. First, the type of act is such that it cannot be enclosed, thus it is a free spectacle; then the average groundhog is astounded into marveling at the antics of this team in a veritable death-defying act one hundred feet above the ground, or the approximate height of an eight story building, without the customary nets or safety devices and on a fragile appearing pole. They will perform nightly under the floodlights or rather above them during the six day engage-

This Seal Is Your Assurance Of

above photograph, a laboratory chemist is checking the radiant ficiency of a radiant type heater by means of a thermopile heat which a radiant heater must pass in order to receive the BLUE STAR Approval Seal, and is your ONLY certain assurance of satisfactory construction and performance

When you go into a hardware or furniture store to look at new radiant or other type room heaters, what qualities do you look for in the heaters shown to you? Isn't it a fact that size, type, appearance and price are about the only points you are readily able to judge?

Yet there are certain fundamental qualities ANY room heater you purchase should have, regardless of size, type and appearance. The particular construction of the burners, air mixers, air shutters, cocks. ignition, manifolds, gas connections, flue outlet and other parts make the utmost difference in the performance and safety of the heater yet, when correct, do not add appreciably to manufacturing or selling

But you are not able to judge these points and determine whether the heater that appeals to you is so constructed that it has a mini-mum fire hazard, gives off no carbon monoxide, is economical with gas, is sufficiently durable and long-lived, and will provide the heating qualities desired. In fact, it has taken a special committee of the American Gas Association since 1921 to formulate a satisfactory yet reasonable set of approval requirements for gas room heaters.

To know whether or not the new room heaters you purchase meet
