GOOD WORK

The report on the first full year's activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps makes interesting reading. Upwards of 600,000 young men have been given jobs, substantial reductions in fire losses on the public domain have been made, some millions of young trees have been set out, and other work of direct monetary value to the nation accomplished.

All this has cost us just $255,000,000—fully two-thirds of which, it is estimated, flowed directly into the channels of industry, commerce, and agriculture.

This makes a fine record of achievement; and it leads one to wonder anew if this C. C. C. couldn't profitably be made a permanent institution. To be sure, $255,000,000 a year is a good deal of money for a regular item on the national budget.

But there is every reason to believe that it is money well spent—from every angle.

The Town Quack

(Reserves the right to "quack" about everything without taking a stand on anything.)

The man who fears the newspaper will misquote him usually is the one who has the least to say of any importance.

The fellow who has learned how to be happy without money usually knows more about how to be happy with money.

Do you know what happens when a husband quits talking? The family row begins to draw to an end.

Wouldn't you hate to be mean and onery so long that you reached a state where the people quit gossiping about you?

Complimenting a man has various effects. I once heard someone tell a local man he was handsome and since that day the fellow hasn't been worth his salt. On the other hand another man was told he was nothing but a bum and since then he has developed greatly along social, civic and religious lines.

W. P. Thornton was Monday displaying the "evidence" of his claim to having produced three onion crops this year. He had on display in the chamber of commerce window big papa onions, middle sized onions and little baby onions. They were grown on his lot on South Main street.

angry. "Very well," he exclaimed. "But mark you—I'll complain to the management about such favoritism!" Crestfallen, realizing that his first move had been very effectively balked by the clerk, and that he'd have to find some other more complicated method of eavesdropping, he turned his wheel-chair about and rolled away. He proceeded to hand-wheel the chair until he was out of the lobby and going down the corridor toward his own room. Then he got to his feet and pushed it. He was in a very vicious humor, his voice ominous.

"Adolph appeared around a corner with a tray lined with glasses of foul-tasting water.

"Here you are, sir," he said, timidly, holding out a glass. "It's time again."

"Supposing you drink the water for me," suggested Brown, his voice pleasant but his eyes glowing evilly.

"But there's nothing the matter with me!" protested the amazed servant, preparing to retreat.

"There's going to be!" predicted the newspaperman, his voice ominous. He gave a wild leap forward, grabbed the tray and Adolph at the same time, and forced a considerable portion of the water down the servant's throat.

The man turned red in the face, gasped for air and scurried down the corridor as if being pursued by some demon.

Brown felt much better after this victory over Adolph and his water bottles. However, his joy was only short-lived. He continued to his room, smiling at his cleverness in outwitting his rival. Sure that within the next few minutes—or at least during the next few hours—he'd have the story of why so many attempts had been made to kill the archduke, he unlocked his door and swung it open.

He gave a gasp of surprise. One eyebrow went up in characteristic manner as amazement turned to anger. He was outraged to find that Briggs, through some chicanery, had invaded the privacy of his room. For a moment, he was speechless with wrath. Briggs took advantage of this brief interlude.

"Flash!" he exclaimed, airily, from an easy chair by the window. "I'm a United Press correspondent where he belongs at last—in a wheel-chair!"

Brown found his voice, and demanded heatedly to know how Briggs had gotten into his room, and why he saw fit to intrude in such a manner. Briggs, losing none of his nonchalant air, explained that he was just trying to be fraternal and sociable and flicked the ashes from his cigarette into a tray beside him.

He quickly related that he knew that some United Press man was in the hotel because of incoming calls from the Paris bureau. He decided to find out, so he just moved into the room and waited for the man to show up.

Brown accused him of bribing telephone girls, and he countered with the remark that he didn't use money for this purpose. Brown advanced on him.

"So that's the way Confederated gets its news!" he scoffed. "I get it—you use your good looks! You fascinate 'em. Say—how're things in Monte Carlo?"

"Just about as quiet as they are at Chateau Thierry," said Briggs. His voice had a sour note in it.

Brown eyed him belligerently as he removed his now useless disguise. Briggs watched his rival with an open glint of victory in his eyes. Brown, after a moment of thought, decided that he'd better be a little more concerned about the entire matter. If he complained too loudly, Briggs might think his mission important—which would never do.

Brown was beginning to suspect that the anniversary dinner to be held that night was far more important than he and Briggs had suspected, and that history might be made in the old hotel.

"Crazy job, I've got—" he said easily. "What can be the point in following this old codger, Ferdinand, around?"

Briggs was just as crafty. "Just a musty old royalist," he said, without concern. "I can't see that what he does has any point to it in this day and age."

Brown reiterated that he was sure the family gathering was without any significance to anyone save those who attended. He suggested that the royalists were just getting together to talk over past glories. However, something in his attitude gave Briggs the idea that he'd better be getting back to work on the story. Trying to be casual, he eased toward the door.

Brown innocently asked him where he was going, being ready to spring for the door himself. Briggs waved his hands vaguely and with a studied attempt to be flippant said that the dinner would start at any moment and that he'd promised to drop in and have a cocktail with the grand duchess.

Brown appeared to think this a bright remark. He smiled amiably, asking Briggs to share any news he might get. Briggs told him that he'd be glad to do just that, but his voice had an insipid ring.

Brown told his rival that he knew he'd be big-hearted and share his news, because, after all, they were out to help each other.

"Of course," pursued Briggs, with mock friendliness. "We have our little arguments—but when you analyze them, they're only kidding matches."

"That's what I always said. Glad you feel that way," observed

Brown, looking as if he'd like to fly at his rival's throat.

"Well, so long, old pal. I'll be seein' ya—," said Briggs. He waved a comradely gesture with one hand as he placed the other on the door knob.

"Take care of yourself, Briggs, old buddy!" urged Brown. "Anything I can do for you—you know."

His voice was sugary—far too sweet.

The battle was on. Each was out to give the other a royal trimming—in more ways than one.

And neither knew that Archduke Ferdinand was mixed up in one of the most sensational moves in modern diplomatic history!

WISCONSIN LOST LANDMARKS

MADISON, Wis. (U.P.)—Two landmarks long identified with Wisconsin's progress have been torn down by C. W. A. crews. The Union hotel at British Hollow, near Lancaster, a two-story brick building erected in 1848, has been removed and the opera house of Waterloo also was torn down. The opera house was built in 1851 ostensibly for a skating rink. It was later used as a shoe factory and for a while served as a town hall before it was converted into a theatre.

"I'LL TELL THE WORLD"

The Romance and Thrills of Newsgathering for the United Press—From Universal's Screenplay.

SYNOPSIS: It looks as if Jane Hamilton of Baltimore has something to do with Archduke Ferdinand, the royalist who is marked as a victim by would-be assassins. And Brown, staff correspondent of the United Press, has fallen in love with Jane without knowing anything about her. At the same time, he is trying to scoop his rival, Briggs, of the Confederated Press. Ferdinand, "Jane Hamilton," Briggs and Brown are all at the Hotel Europa at Vichy for Ferdinand's birthday dinner.

CHAPTER VI William Briggs, of the Confederated Press, congratulating himself on what he thought was a successful effort to dodge his rival, Stanley Brown, of the United Press, nevertheless was having a great deal of trouble following up his supposed advantage. He spent hours trying to gain an interview with Archduke Ferdinand. Ferdinand, however, had no desire to see the gentlemen of the press. What he had locked in his own heart was his secret, and he meant to hang on to it.

Briggs rushed into the still proud but inclined to be shabby lobby of the Hotel Europa at Vichy, and asked the clerk if he had sent up his card to the archduke, as he simply had to have an interview immediately. Ferdinand and several others of the royal family were in seclusion in the east wing of the Hotel. Attempts had been made to kill the archduke. There was much secrecy but nevertheless feverish bustling about! The whole hostelry had an air of suspense and dire foreboding about it! Brown, his constant rival, might possibly appear at any moment, and try to scoop him! If the clerk would please— "I'm sorry, sir," said the dignified clerk, interrupting Briggs' remarkable flow of words. "But the archduke sends down word that he doesn't wish to be disturbed." Briggs scoffed at this. "Sure!" he snapped. "Falls seventeen floors in an elevator, gets smashed against a concrete pillar, has his taxicab blown to pieces—and then you say he can't be disturbed!" He eyed the register on the desk before him. "After all," he said, glancing over the names in an effort to find out if anyone else of importance was in the hostelry. "He's only an archduke." He snapped his fingers, as if dismissing the ancient royalist as a troublesome nobody. The clerk lifted his eyebrows. "Just the same, sir, he's the patriarch of Europe's oldest family," he rebuked. "He should have outgrown that by now," suggested Briggs. "However, I'll see him yet. If I can't see him by being polite, I'll try a few tricks of my own."

Brown, coming into the lobby in his wheel-chair, saw Briggs and wheeled up behind him. He stopped, waited for his rival to get out of the way. When Briggs turned from the desk, Brown deliberately tripped him with his cane. Then the United Press man assumed the manner of an irascible, feeble old man. "You young whopper—snapper—why don't you look where you're going?" he cackled, belligerently. "Sorry, sir," apologized Briggs, still not recognizing him. "I couldn't see you." He stepped aside. "Well, believe me, it's mutual!" was the scathing retort from Brown. Briggs missed the point of the remark, walked away. Brown grinned after him, then turned his attention to the clerk. He had overheard the clerk tell Briggs that his attempt to see the archduke was a failure. He decided to try a plan far more subtle to find out what went on at the dinner that night. "I don't like my room," he complained irascibly. "It's lousy—I mean noisy."

"I'll be glad to change it for you, sir!" said the clerk. "You'll never be able to change that room," grumbled Brown, "but you can change me into the east wing."

"Certainly, sir! Tomorrow, sir!" agreed the clerk. "Tomorrow! Tomorrow! Dog-gone it, sir, where I come from there's no such word as tomorrow. Tonight! That's when I want it. Tonight!" stormed Brown, seeing his chances of getting close to the royal party slipping away. "I'm sorry, sir, but there are no

Circle Will Take New Study Course

The Laura Haygood circle of the Methodist auxiliary met Monday afternoon in a combined business and study session. Members of the circle voted to take a Bible study elective course given in the Methodist Sunday school quarter, for which they will receive credit. The meeting held at the home of Mrs. C. E. Nolan, opened with a devotional reading by Mrs. Frank Prothro. Following a prayer by Mrs. A. J. Norwood, Mrs. Nolan presented a previous assignment from the auxiliary handbook, rules and regulations by which the organization is governed. Highlights of the council meeting recently held at Birmingham, Ala., were discussed by Mrs. J. L. Tidwell. Mrs. Jess Prothro, auxiliary president, pronounced the benediction.

Everything in Readiness for Woman's Picture

With unusually strong screen attractions set in for April 26th—"Woman's Day"—Manager Hal Grady of the Yucca theatre here announced today that everything is in readiness for the redletter day in the history of women's clubs in Texas.

"Woman's Day" was set aside as the date of a state wide drive for funds to cut down the indebtedness of the Texas Federation of Women's clubs clubhouse in Austin. The plan originated with Mrs. Volney W. Taylor of Brownsville, president of the Federation, and Karl Hobitzelle, pioneer theatrical man and president of the Interstate Circuit, Inc., with offices in Dallas.

Under this arrangement a portion of the receipts of the Yucca theatre here, together with an equal portion of the receipts from theatres in every city and town in Texas will go to the clubhouses fund of the woman's organization.

"I am looking forward to a record business on April 26th," said manager Grady. "We have arranged to present an outstanding screen program on this day. We feel that it is a worthy cause and are doing everything possible to assist the ladies in putting across an event that will make history in theatricals as well as in club circles. The splendid co-operation of the women of the local organization has made it a pleasure for me and my staff to assist to the utmost."

Manager Grady was unusually cheerful in outlining his program for the day. "This Man Is Mine," a delightful comedy starring Irene Dunne with Constance Cummings and Ralph Bellamy, will be shown and tickets will be good for Thursday and Friday.

History (Continued from page 1.) city's first garage. Schnaubert's father was the first sheriff of Upson county. The first set of twins to be born in McCamey were born to Mr. and Mrs. Maltby. Their names were Alline and Pauline, born Oct. 19, 1926. The city of McCamey was incorporated in April, 1927, and Dr. F. E. Gibbons was elected the first mayor. Tyron Lewis Sr., a native of West Texas, who was here the first day the town was started, served as mayor pro-tem during the organization period. Lewis came here from Fort Stockton where he had long resided. Dr. Gibbons, who served as mayor for three years, was replaced by Leonard Pactor, now of Midland. Gibbons now resides in Presidio. Pactor was succeeded by W. E. Anderson, the present mayor. (To be continued)

Lavish Beauty Delights Fans Today at Ritz

Laughs and beauty abound in Paramount's "Search for Beauty," showing today and tomorrow at the Ritz theatre, and which features the thirty perfect young men and women chosen by the studio from among more than 176,000 contestants in all English-speaking countries of the world. James Gleason and Robert Armstrong furnish a riot of fun and are convincing in their roles of crook promoters. Leading honors are shared by Ida Lupino, young English actress, and Larry "Buster" Crabbe, former Olympic swimmer, champion. Gertrude Michael and Toby Wing give excellent performances. The story deals with the efforts of crooked promoters to cash in on a health and beauty racket, using Crabbe and Miss Lupino as unwitting come-ons. The crooks lose out on their own scheme as their "frosts" assert themselves in a surprising manner with amusing results. The picture was ably directed by Eric Kenton with special dialog by Sam Hellman. Photography by Harry Fischbeck adds to the beauty of the spectacular ensemble numbers.

WILL GO TO MCCAMEY Oil men and others of Midland plan to go to McCamey Friday and Saturday to attend the birthday celebration in that city. Rodeo fans plan to attend the afternoon bronc busting and calf roping events. Saturday will likely draw the largest crowd, as the barbecue will be on that day. Lubricant leakage from wheel bearings to brake drums is responsible for a large percentage of brake relining jobs.

WINK BAND AGAIN IS TO COMPETE Wink, the little town out in western Texas, which has been a consistent winner in the West Texas high school band contest during the last few years, will again be represented by the largest delegation this year. Earl Ray, band conductor, has made reservations for 140 at an Abilene hotel. He will enter his high school band in the class B contest and his junior high band in the contests of that group. His band has won the class C contest for the past three years. Representatives of 19 other towns will be guests of the Simmons Cowboy band Friday when five classes of bands and soloists will compete for loving cup and medal awards. As a climax to the day's activities, a massed band concert, with 250 pieces playing, will be given in the evening at the Simmons auditorium.

Gloria Swanson To Get Divorce

NEW YORK—Gloria Swanson, film actress, announced she was conferring with her lawyers preparatory to obtaining a divorce from her husband, F. Michael Farmer. "I have thought about the matter for a long time," she said, "and I have decided that our marriage was a mistake." Miss Swanson made this announcement in the dressing room of the theatre at which she is making a personal appearance. Her marriage to Farmer in 1931 was her fourth.

KNOW THE TRUTH ABOUT MOTOR OILS—Conoco dares to give you the facts! Here are no idle claims—But PROOF!

COMPARE this positive proof of superiority with all the exaggerated claims you hear about motor oils—now the facts can be told. We arranged with the Contest Board, American Automobile Association, to test five widely-known and advertised motor oils along with New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil in a daring "Destruction Test."

These six oils, a single fill of 5 quarts, with no more oil added, in six brand new strictly stock cars, were driven until the motor in each car was destroyed from lack of lubrication. The first oil failed with motor destroyed at 1,713.2 miles—others failed in rapid succession. The best of the competing oils ran a total of 3,318.8 miles... while New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil lubricated its motor for a total of 4,729 miles!... more than 3,000 miles farther than the first oil to fail... and more than 1,400 miles farther than the second best oil. Thanks to Conoco's Hidden Quart protection, this amazing victory stands unchallenged!

This is evidence... these are facts... that should open a new era of results and economy for your motor. Drive into a Conoco Station or dealer—fill with this New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil. There's no longer any guess about what oil is best for your car!

Warning TO NEW CAR OWNERS

Some car manufacturers are using new types of bearings which will stand greater pressures and temperatures, resulting from increased power and speed. New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil has been exhaustively tested on these new bearings. The results show that it gives greater protection against damage than many straight mineral oils now on the market. Protect your new car by using the motor oil you can be sure of.
