EUROPEAN THREAT OF WAR REVIVED ASK THAT CATTLE BUYING CONTINUE

PARIS, Oct. 17. (AP)—France was striving desperately to keep the Marseille murders from becoming another Sarajevo as police at Melun tore from Mio Kriza, third terrorist suspect jailed, an admission that he was sent to Marseille to kill King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

While the French determination to have Hungary clean up the alleged terrorist ring that plotted Alexander's death equalled that of the latter, France nevertheless was eager to keep tempers even and prevent the Balkan powder keg's flaring up again.

Jugoslavia, mourning its dead monarch, was expected here to demand explanation from Hungary of its alleged tolerance at Danke Puzta of the Ustaasi, Croat revolutionary organization headed by Dr. Ante Pavelich, which police charge with the assassinations.

(Hungarian officials have steadfastly denied the existence of the terrorist headquarters in their territory.)

The Surete Nationale announced that Krap, alias Sylvester Chalmy of Malny, who was known to his Ustaasi fellows as "Scarface" and "the strong," confessed at Melun that he was sent to Marseille with Flada Georgieff, Tschernocemsky, alias Petrus Klemen, to stage the assassination of Alexander.

He told the Associated Press, in broken German: "I am a Croat. What I did and what I wanted to do were for Croatian liberty."

The province of Croatia in Jugoslavia has long been stirred by agitation for its autonomy or independence of the Belgrade government.

His confession named Egon Kvaternik, or Kramer, as the "delegate" of Dr. Ante Pavelich, chief of the revolutionary society, and the man who ordered him to Marseille.

A dispatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, today said the Marseille assassin had been identified definitely as Vlada Georgieff, Macedonian revolutionist.

Political implications of the tragedy at Marseille concerned Paris almost as much as the hunt for the assassin band as French diplomacy strove actively to avert an increase of the decade-long friction between Italy and Jugoslavia.

Frightened lest declarations published in the press that Italian money helped support Balkan terrorist groups might stir new hatred, the French were hastening preparations for the visit to Rome of Pierre Laval, new foreign minister.

Relief Education Explained to Club

The possibilities bound up in the emergency educational program which will conduct "opportunity schools" throughout the nation through employment of relief funds, was explained to the Lions club at noon by County Farm Agent S. A. Debnam.

Many wish to take high school subjects, one business man wants a course in Spanish, negroes want general courses. One young business man has offered to teach a course in commercial law, and has volunteered to instruct without cost.

Twenty-nine Lions attended. The luncheon was served by women of the First Christian church.

Negro Defendants To Give Versions of Dance Shooting

A pistol-packing parson, the Rev. W. H. "Mobile Baptist," surname evidently unknown by his parishioners; E. N. Nickleberry and Fred Phillips, negroes from Odessa, will relate in examining trial today their versions of the shooting "in the flat" Sunday night of Willie Smith, another Odessa negro.

Smith was shot in the spine and in one leg after he attempted to flee the asserted wrath of the other three after he had been beaten over the head with a gun.

The wounded man may recover. He was carried to Odessa Monday after getting surgical attention here. Smith, ex-convict, told officers he had been having trouble with his wife. He counted his children before he left for a 2-year sentence at Huntsville and swore there was one more when he returned. He protested no obligation to support of the extra member of the family, but his father-in-law, Phillips couldn't see it that way.

Smith took the train to the regular Sunday night ramble at the Watson hotel for colored. Officers were told the Rev. "Mobile Baptist" armed himself with a 22 pistol and Nickleberry with a 45 Colt automatic. The father-in-law, Phillips, tried persuasion which, failing, resolved itself into holding Smith while the minister drummed on his head with the 22. Smith broke loose and started to run, whereupon Nickleberry entered the argument with a splitting six-gun.

The three defendants have been in the Midland county jail since the offense.

MRS. STOLL SAVED BY KIDNAPER'S WIFE

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 17. (UP)—The manhunt spread over the nation for Thomas H. Robinson Jr., believed to be the kidnaper of Mrs. Stoll. He was believed to be carrying all but $550 of the $50,000 ransom.

Authorities were questioning his wife, Frances Robinson, who was a companion of Mrs. Stoll at Indianapolis, and the father of the alleged kidnaper.

Thomas Sparks, United States district attorney, announced that "if the present facts are upheld by developments, he will seek warrants charging Robinson and his wife with the kidnaping."

Mrs. Stoll reportedly had pleaded for leniency for Mrs. Robinson. Mrs. Stoll said she was paid $3,000, saying, "this woman saved my life." The statement suggested that there might have been a threat to kidnap Mrs. Stoll after the ransom was paid.

No explanation was given why Mrs. Robinson accompanied the victim toward Indianapolis while the pursuit was hottest and risked a chance at capture when the ransom already was paid.

Albert Anan was being questioned at Chicago, having been linked to the case by a phone call warning him to flee because Mrs. Stoll had returned home. He said he had been in Louisville at the time of the kidnaping, police said.

It was learned the kidnaping of Mrs. Stoll became excited when government agents started closing in and threatened to kill the victim. Mrs. Stoll said the kidnaper's wife prevailed on him to leave the captive and flee.

MRS. STOLL SAFELY RETURNED HOME

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 17. (AP)—Mrs. Stoll was reported safe after six days in the hands of a lunatic kidnaper, was returned safely to her home last night.

Department of justice agents found the young wife of Berry V. Stoll, wealthy oil man, at Scottsburg, Ind., and hurried her back to Louisville.

The young society woman, abducted from her home last Wednesday afternoon, was brutally treated at times, but was described as in a fairly good condition. She was put to bed at once under a physician's care.

Thomas H. Robinson, Jr., 27, former inmate of insane asylums in Tennessee, was named by the department as the kidnaper of Mrs. Stoll. He had been sought since the kidnaping and a formal order was sent out for his arrest. Orders for other arrests went out at Nashville, Kentucky, and a focal point of the investigation.

Robinson's wife, trailed from Nashville where she received the ransom to Indianapolis, was taken in custody and held for possible accessory charges.

The Rev. E. Arnold Clegg, pastor of Capital Methodist Episcopal church in Indianapolis, and his wife were in the automobile in which justice agents found the wealthy kidnap victim, and the alleged kidnaper's wife. The Cleggs were released after the department of justice in Washington announced they were not involved.

Woman Followed

The lead that enabled federal agents to rescue the daughter of one of Kentucky's wealthiest families came when Mrs. Robinson called for the $50,000 ransom package in Nashville. It had been shipped there last Friday by the Louisville Express according to directions in the original ransom note.

Mrs. Robinson was trailed to the Little Indiana town, where she tried a ruse to get the woman into a taxicab by a disguised federal agent. The trick failed and she took another cab.

The agents trailed along behind following the car to Indianapolis and to the home of the Cleggs. Late yesterday afternoon a large machine containing Mrs. Stoll drove away from the Clegg home. At Scottsburg, Ind., the agents overtook it and rescued the woman.

They had sent hurried word to Louisville and other agents were on their way at full speed by motor to intercept the machine but arrived after the men trailing the car had overtaken it and rescued Mrs. Stoll.

Robinson himself, who had been the object of an intensive search by justice agents, was not present when Mrs. Stoll was found on the road near the Little Indiana town, about 30 miles north of Louisville.

The former asylum inmate was reported to have telephoned his father in Nashville from Indianapolis this afternoon and to have declared that he was going to kill Mrs. Stoll. Reports received here were that the father, who has been trying to communicate with his son, begged him not to do that, but a wild laugh ended the conversation.

Information gathered in Louisville was that Mrs. Stoll had been allowed to telephone her husband here and that this call was traced to the Clegg home in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Stoll, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Shailecross Speed, was slugged on the head, her maid, Ann Woollet, reported, by a sawed-off man who entered the home last Wednesday night saying he had come to repair the telephone.

Mrs. Stoll was confined to the house with a cold and wore only a negligee. She was allowed to wear a light coat before she left. The kidnaper spent an hour or more in the home, according to reports from the maid. Stoll had not returned from his office.

Mrs. Stoll offered the man a check to let the maid told police, but he refused and struck her. "If Berry comes, I'll kill him," the maid said the man threatened.

"Let's go then," Mrs. Stoll was said to have declared. She left the house and was driven off in a car.

Kentucky's greatest manhunt began. Hundreds of clues, most of them false, were run down. There was half a dozen reports of women with bandaged heads having been seen in automobiles and each had to be checked.

Man's Record

Robinson, tall slender and thin faced, is shown by records of the Tennessee state department of institutions to have been an inmate of state hospitals for the insane.

He was placed in the central state hospital in Nashville following a plea of insanity entered by defense counsel in the spring and brought to trial on a robbery charge of 1929, the records state.

LAW MUST HAVE FACTS TO TRY HAUPTMANN

Consider the pleasant ins and outs of the law's technicalities.

New York lawyers, who have studied the case against Bruno R. Hauptmann, Lindbergh kidnaping suspect, point out that what the general public has taken for a very strong case against him is really pretty weak.

To begin with: Is Hauptmann to be tried in New Jersey for kidnaping? By New Jersey law, kidnaping is a felony, and no indictment on a felony can be drawn there if two years have elapsed between the time the crime was committed and the time the grand jury takes the case.

But this statute is voided in cases where the prisoner has been a fugitive from justice. Very well, then—what was Hauptmann a fugitive? There was no charge against him at any time before his arrest. No kidnaping indictment was ever handed down.

Can New Jersey try him for murder? To do so, the state must prove that he was at the scene of the crime—which, unless the authorities have important evidence at whose existence they have not even hinted, may well be quite impossible. They must prove that the Lindbergh baby was murdered, which may also be difficult.

Indeed, some lawyers assert that as the evidence stands now, there is actually room for doubt whether Hauptmann could even be extradited from New York to New Jersey.

Suppose, then, that he stands trial in New York for extortion. It is reported that Dr. John F. Condon is unable to identify Hauptmann definitely as the man to whom he gave the ransom money. In that case, say the lawyers, the New York extortion charge might not survive a session in court.

All of this indicates that the road to a conviction in the Lindbergh case may be a rocky one. The fact that a man is found in possession of money definitely identifiable as the ransom money may be damning in the eyes of the general public; in a court of law, more evidence is needed.

Now this does not necessarily mean that the law is, as Mr. Bumble once remarked, "a ass." The law is quite properly devised so that an accused man gets the benefit of every doubt. A man must not be convicted on mere likelihood; the jury must be certain.

But it does throw a light on some of the difficulties that lie in the path of a prosecutor. A case that looks strong to the man in the street may look weak indeed to the lawyer.

EXPENSIVE DEFENSE

If naval technicians had not evolved their art to such a high degree of complicated and costly perfection, the price of building a first-rate battle fleet would be a great deal less than it is—and the economic argument for armament reduction would lose much of its force.

Construction was begun the other day at the Philadelphia navy yard of two new 1500-ton destroyers, the Cassin and the Shaw. Each boat will cost approximately $2,700,000 for hull and machinery.

Contrast that with bills that were incurred a generation ago, when the United States began to rebuild its fleet following the post-Civil War letdown. The Olympia, a heavy cruiser used as Admiral Dewey's flagship at Manila Bay, cost almost exactly what one of these new destroyers will cost.

In other words, the cost of building one of the lighter craft, which a first-rate navy must number by the dozen, is equal to the cost of a main unit of the fleet a generation ago. No wonder modern navies are expensive.

No wonder the initial Newport yacht race lacked the necessary wind. All the politicians were elsewhere with election duties.

After Huey Long's investigation of New Orleans, we ought to have one on Hollywood by Will Hays and on Chicago by Big Bill Thompson.

Reichert's next move was to retire the game little gelding to his farm near Belleville, Ill., there to spend the remainder of his days in ease. But that was no life for My Dandy. Away from the turmoil and excitement of the track he loved the horse began to wither away until he was a shadow of his former self. When Reichert returned to the farm he was amazed at the decline of his favorite thoroughbred.

So this spring he returned the horse to training and My Dandy showed that he had already recovered from the effects of his lameness. Shipped to Rockingham (the champion gelding worked two-eighths of a mile in close to record time, following which his jockey fell off, My Dandy ran away two miles and finally crashed through a fence, ripping his flesh terribly.

The track veterinarian was called. He shook his head. For the third time My Dandy heard himself condemned to death. But Reichert knew the big heart—the biggest heart any horse ever had—and slowly, tenderly he nursed the great racer back to health.

His record since then is turf history. Returning to the races at Rockingham park My Dandy won a $2500 handicap and was then tossed into a $5000 added event against the best runners at the track. In a mile and one-eighth race he led all the way, tiring only in the last few strides to be tossed out by the Whitney Coloburney, Mad Fump. Considering that it was My Dandy's first distance race in nearly two years his performance was truly remarkable.

Last Saturday he won the Col. Green Handicap in a gallop from the most distinguished field of the Rockingham season, serving notice that he will be a hard horse to

'Wake up and Dream'

From screenplay by John Meehan Jr.

SYNOPSIS: As Paul Scotti, the handsome singer—Toby Brown, beautiful singer and dancer—and Charley Sullivan, amateur promoter, a vaudeville trio, settle in Hollywood, they have hopes of making good in motion pictures. This is their last desperate chance. They are broke. They have failed in musical comedy because Charley, after kidnapping a leading man to get them a chance, has believed that the faces charges and had fled the east. They have failed in vaudeville because the man they schemed to make fall for their act has sold his theaters. They are burdened with Luigi Cellini, Paul's Italian foster-father. On the bus trip out, Charley has seen the actress, Hildebrand, whom he is sure is following him.

Chapter XI

After a week in California, Paul, Charley and Toby were sure that the place wasn't the paradise it was supposed to be. They had discovered that they couldn't eat the climate and that there was barbed wire around all the orange groves. As they grew hungrier and hungrier, the one who suffered most was the curly-headed, roly-poly Cellini, who never in all his life had passed three hours without sinking his teeth into something edible—except when asleep.

Cellini at last had proved of some worth. Through his cultivation of Madame Rose, the strange seer and hypnotist, he had secured living quarters for the quartette. She owned "Rosecourt," a bungalow court near Hollywood boulevard. Cellini had made haphazard love to her, and she had placed a bungalow at his disposal on his mere promise to pay rent in the dim and distant future. However, she did not go so far as to provide board, which irked the excitable Italian no end.

Within a few days after arrival, the staple diet of the quartette had become nothing more than crackers and milk. And for lunch on this balmy day, that was the meal. Clumsily, Charley, Toby and Cellini sat around a table in the breakfast nook. A big box of crackers stood in the center, and each had a glass of milk. Paul wasn't there. He was out looking for work. As the trio attempted to wash down the crackers with milk it was apparent that Cellini was near the breaking point.

Suddenly, he took a cracker out of the box, looked at it, and slammed it down on the table. Charley and Toby gaped at him.

"Bah!" he exploded. He turned sideways in his chair and crossed his legs, hurling a final sneer at the meagre diet. He was just about to make further derisive comment when all heard Scotti whistling as he walked toward the bungalow.

He entered the front room, slammed the door behind him and called, in imitation of Kate Smith: "Hello, everybody!"

As he entered the nook, the curious and expectant eyes of his three friends were upon him. "Guess what's happened?" he demanded, smiling. "I've found a house."

Cellini leaped to his feet, laughing hysterically. He rushed to Paul, threw his arms around him and kissed him on both cheeks. Then he turned to the others, saying: "You heard what he said? We eat!"

He executed a wild dance around the room, singing as he did so. But his joy was only short-lived. "Wait a minute!" Charley snapped at him, and he halted in his tracks. Charley turned to Paul.

"I don't believe it," he said. "Tell us about it!"

"It isn't much," apologized Paul. "Just a few bucks a week and a dinner for four every night."

"What's the matter?" asked Cellini, looking from one to the other. "Now we have a job and we make money I go tell her—"

Paul pushed him against the wall. "Listen—this job won't give us enough to pay the rent for a dog house," he explained. "Anyway, it isn't set yet."

"I knew it!" Toby groaned. "There was bound to be a catch!"

"I'll dance on my hands for a steak," said Toby.

"Win, lose or draw, we eat one meal," said Paul.

Cellini still complained about having to court Madame Rose. (See STORY, page 4)

FEMININE FANCIES

BY KATHLEEN EILAND

If you want to learn definitely the meaning of the word pandemonium, just live through a moving day.

We must admit that men know more about moving furniture than we thought. Some gentlemen of our acquaintance moved our office belongings and we discover that our mirror and a glass vase are still intact.

Heretofore we have been too critical of men—or is it that the species is improving so far as the technique of moving day is concerned?

We have discovered one advantage of going to gym class—ability to sleep harder than we have in a month. Of course naving to rush madly down to work because we overslept is else again.

What compares to the thrill of finding the telephone book that has been lost for a week?

Story--

Paul tried to silence him, but he protested.

"Me—the great Cellini! The artist! What do you make of me—a gigolo!" He beat his chest frantically, a wild light in his eyes. "You keep right on going," Charley told him. "What's the matter? You liked her all right at first."

"Sure!" agreed Cellini. "Then, I don't know she's crazy. Now, all the time she looks in that glass ball—" With his hands, he shaped her crystal globe. "Pretty soon I go crazy, too. I don't do it no more."

While he spoke, the front door opened and Madame Rose entered, calling his name in honeyed tones. The Italian looked wildly for some escape. Paul and Charley grabbed and held him. He groaned, covered his face with his hands. Madame Rose appeared in the doorway to the breakfast nook. She had discarded her severe black hat, dress and shoes, and the death-like make-up. She had become strictly feminine. A chiffon dress to the walls, while there was a dance floor in the center. A tiny four-piece band blared unhappily and a tulleless prima donna stood in the center of the floor and screeched to five or six parties at the various tables.

At one of the tables in the secluded corner sat Paul, Toby, Charley and Cellini. Their table was set for dinner, but no food had arrived. Paul, nervously drumming on the table, complained about the racket which the prima donna was making.

"I heard a noise like that once on a boat in a heavy fog," observed Charley, as Cellini made a face and covered his ears.

The proprietor came to the table. He told Paul, as he pointed to the prima donna: "When she gets through, you take the little piano and sing."

"We just ordered dinner," protested Charley. "Work first—then dinner!" was the man's ultimatum. He left the table and, as the hungry four glared at his back, went to the foyer to greet a party of three who were arriving. There was a man, accompanied by two women. The man was stout, had a look of heaviness. He was short, tried to appear very important and did not succeed very well. The woman on his right, to whom he gave all his attention, was a garish, overblonde, over-dressed creature with a hard look in her eyes. She was heavily made up and her attitude suggested that she was trying to attract attention. The woman on his left was in a business suit. She appeared as bored as the man's scintillant companion looked. As the prima donna stopped singing, the proprietor dashed forward, grinning, rubbing his hands. He said, obsequiously:

"Good evening, Mr. Goldfarb! And Miss La Rue. Such a pleasure!" "Sh-h-h—" said Goldfarb, placing a finger on his lips. "Oh! Excuse it, please," said the proprietor. "You don't know me," said Goldfarb. He indicated Miss La Rue. "You never saw either of us before."

"Of course," said the proprietor, and led them to a table which was in a secluded corner. He left them to call a waiter. Miss La Rue looked around her, protested that the roadhouse was a terrible dump and suggested that they'd have done better to go to the Biltmore.

"We might, as well go to some decent place," she said to Goldfarb, "we're not fooling anybody." "You mustn't say that," protested Goldfarb, alarmed. "What if my wife finds out?" "If you ask me," cut in Miss Banks, "your wife's smart enough to take what she's getting and keep quiet."

Goldfarb ignored this, said to her: "Get out your notebook—act like you're taking a letter to my partner—anything!" "I think I'll get another job," said Miss Banks. "This is the fourth dinner date I've broken this week to be your chaperone. I'm a secretary, a business woman."

"All right—take this letter—be sure that you get everything. I'm just thinking out loud." "You're just being loud," put in

Among the First Strands of Range Wire Still Stands

AMARILLO (AP)—One of the first strands of barbed wire to whine the knell of open range in the western cow country still stands in the outskirts of Amarillo.

The fence, which was built along the east side of the vast Frying Pan Ranch in 1862, escaped fence-cutters and has withstood the ravages of sweeping winds, tumbleweeds and the ice of many winters.

For half a century the barbed strands of black wire have hummed to the wind as small ranches and heavy-set purebreds replaced the open range and lanky longhorns.

Barbed wire played a big part in taming the West, the singing strands defining settled boundary lines that once were decided by verbal agreement or powder and lead.

There was a howl of protest when wire came to the cow country and for a time the sound of cutters, Winchester and six-guns brought discords.

It was the opinion of cattlemen that their stock would run into the wire and be cut to pieces. The idea of fencing watering holes and rangelands brought a bad taste to the mouth and blood to the eyes.

Two years after the Frying Pan ranch was fenced the Texas legislature passed a bill providing that...

Daughter Phones; Rites Called off

KANSAS CITY, Kas., Oct. 17. (AP). Plans of Mr. and Mrs. James McCrea, Lavaca, Ark., farmers, to bury a slain young expectant mother as their daughter were interrupted by the startling statement of a girl on relief rolls at Pine Bluff, Ark., that she is the missing 18-year-old Winnie Mae McCrea.

The news reached the bewildered parents at a funeral parlor where they had pronounced their identification as "positive" after careful examination.

Meanwhile mystery again enshrouded the body of the girl which was found, shot several times at close range, in a highway ditch near here more than a week ago.

AGGIES YEARN TO BREAK T.C.U. JINX

FORT WORTH—The Texas Aggies have not defeated Texas Christian University on the gridiron for 10 years. The last Aggie victory came in 1924 by a 29-0 score.

There have been two ties during this 10-year period, but all of the remaining seven games have been won by the Horned Frogs.

This recital gives sufficient reason for the statement that the Frogs will run into one of the hardest games of the season when they journey to College State next Saturday.

The Farmers, away to a bad start, will not only be out to break the long series of T. C. U. victories, but to show the Southwest what they can really do.

Both schools have new coaches. Coach Dutch Meyer of T. C. U. will be out to maintain the Frogs' record of victories. Coach Homer Norton could gain himself a place in the sun by pulling the Aggies through on top.

The Frogs, encouraged somewhat by their showing against Tulsa, are making the most of the four days of practice sessions in which to prepare for the Farmers. Drew Ellis, guard, added to the hospital list in the Tulsa play, makes the fourth man who will be unable to go against the Aggies—Harston, Diggs, McCall and Ellis.

Six members and one visitor attended the regular meeting of the women's Bible class of the Church of Christ Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. A. G. Bohannon taught the lesson. Attending were: Mmes. W. F. Hojl, Jackson, Bewley, Thorpe, Bohannon, Watlington, and A. G. Bohannon.

A eight-month cruise of the vessel, Sir James Clark Ross, netted 1444 whales, which yielded oil to an estimated value of $1,250,000.

Latin Tournaments Are More Popular

AUSTIN—Despite the fact that hundreds of years have elapsed since Latin was spoken in the Roman Empire, it is still popular in Texas. It is evident from the report of the 1934 Texas Latin tournament, sponsored among high schools of the state by the University of Texas department of classical languages.

A total of 514 high school students participated in the tournament, an even greater number than in 1933, when contestants numbered 460. These students represented 103 schools.

The contestants in the state-wide tournament formed but a portion of the enrollment in Latin classes, it is indicated by the fact that 1400 attended the banquets which closed the district elimination contests, of
