STRIKE MAKES LABOR DAY GRIM

AUTUMN WINDS BRING SHOWERS, LOW MERCURY Rain and Sandstorms Experienced Over The State

DALLAS, Sept. 3. (U.P.)—Autumn came to Tex. today, borne on northerly winds which swept the Panhandle and brought rains to East Texas.

A 50-mile wind was blowing tons of fine sand over the Panhandle.

LIGHT SHOWER FALLS OVER MIDLAND

Rain reports were meager this morning, because of observance of the Labor day holiday by utilities companies and others.

Rains were reported at Stanton and on the road leading north to Lagresa, also all the way to Big Spring, with heavy rainfall a Morita section house, half way between the two towns.

The first shower fell here at 8 o'clock Sunday night, another falling after midnight accompanied by strong winds.

At Pampa the thermometer registered 35 degrees according to a telephone call to E. W. Ticknor, Magnolia pipe line superintendent.

Preacher of This Area Allowed Big Snake to Strike

MCCAMEY—The North Carolina preacher—Albert Teester—who permitted himself to be bitten by a rattlesnake in order to demonstrate the power of the Lord's anointing oil to his flock.

When I found out what the preacher—I don't remember his name—wants with the snake, I refused to let him have it.

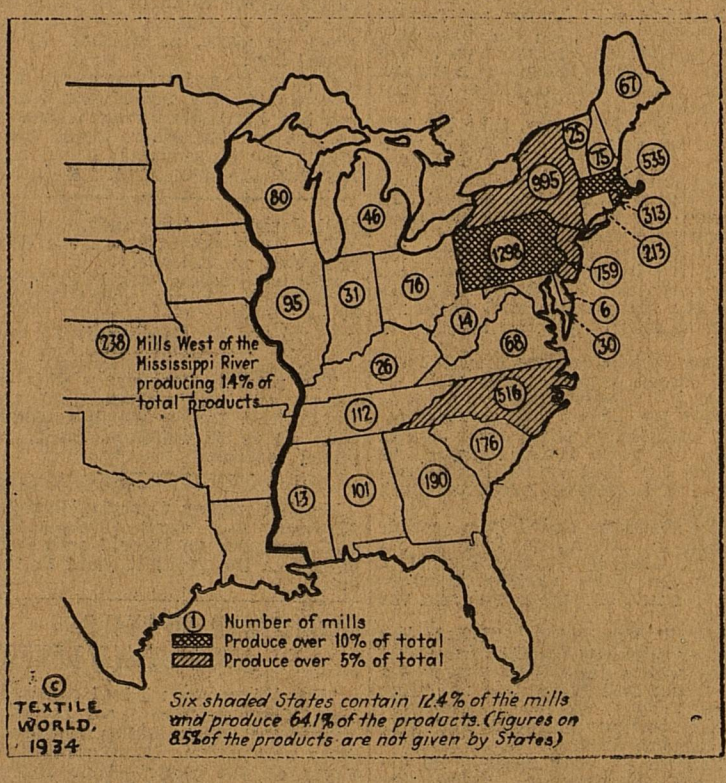

While a rattlesnake bite is very painful, as I happen to know, I showed the scars of a bite on one of his fingers, only ten per cent of those bitten by venomous snakes in this country die from it.

Brown says this, for some reason or other, has been an off season for snakes. Last year he shipped 45 of them to Snakoid, who made $85,000 with a snake act at the World's Fair at Chicago this season.

He says rattlesnakes require very little to eat, eats a pair that stayed on the roof of his place of business from one spring to the following February with nothing to eat and no water except when rain fell.

A dumbbell is a co-ed who hasn't gotten any wiser between semesters.

Hardest Hit Strike Area

The cotton strike will affect North and South Carolina, Georgia, Massachusetts and Rhode Island more than other areas.

Here's the Why and How Of the Big Textile Strike

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—What happened in the cotton textile industry was that NRA cut wages 25 per cent under NRA code No. 1.

But you mustn't forget "the stretch-out," an equally important part of the picture. You get "the stretch-out" when you're working in a mill and sending certain numbers of machines and the boss tells you you must handle some more.

More Work Before Code There was much more actual employment in that pre-code period when the average working week was around 55 hours, than there has ever been since under NRA's 40-hour maximum.

Code Authority Indignant Chairman George A. Sloan of the cotton textile code authority and other industry leaders are protesting indignantly about the strike.

Other Complaints Made There were other complaints that workers were being fired for union activities and that mill owners were forcing maximum wages for skilled and semi-skilled workers down to the code minimum.

GREAT BOMBERS FLYING ACROSS COUNTRY TODAY

Roar of Cyclones Is Heard Over Plains City at 9 A. M.

Ten giant B-10 Martin bombers that recently made a sensational flight to Alaska from Washington, D. C. were over Amarillo this morning at 6 o'clock.

Only two arrows were necessary, and the flight in perfect V formation through moisture clouds.

The flight took off from Rockwell field, San Diego, the army air base at Sloan field, Midland, learned by radio, and is en route to Bolling field, Washington.

It was not understood how the great planes could fly non-stop across the continent, and airmen attached believed several refueling stops would be made.

Four thousand two hundred gallons of gasoline was held in readiness here from the craft, each ship carrying a full fuel load of 1,000 gallons.

Hunters Flock to Hunting Grounds

It looks like an Easter egg hunt, the exodus of hunters, Frank Hampe, game warden, says they're "thick as fleas" in the counties where the prairie chicken and the dove are abundant.

Few hunters are getting many chickens, but the doves are especially numerous and most hunters are getting their bag limit.

Midland Hardware & Furniture company ran out of licenses and Hampe had to wire Austin for more. Blanks were made locally for the time being and filled out.

Army Buyers to Inspect 50 Head of Horses Here

Officers from Fort Reno, Okla., will be here Thursday of this week to inspect and buy a string of cavalry horses, local breeders have been advised.

Unofficial requirements for army horses are that they be not younger than three years, not less than 15 hands and one inch tall, although three-year-olds sometimes are taken slightly lower, and that they must perform adequately as to handling when demonstrated to the buyers.

Tom Nance has had 15 head of army prospects at Cowboy park for several days, ready to show to the buyers.

Strike May Drag for Several Weeks, It Is Believed

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3. (U.P.)—America's fiercest nation-wide strike made this Labor day the grimmest in the country's history.

More than 600,000 workers in cotton, woollen, worsted, silk and rayon plants were involved in the biggest walkout yet to plague the new deal.

Leaders said 150,000 more in the velvet, drapery, underwear and synthetic yarn mills would be carrying labor's defiant banners before the weekend.

At Brookford, N. C., today a man and a woman were injured as a mob rushed the gate of the local textile mill. Extent of injuries is unknown.

Government peace overtures were at a standstill.

Japanese and British interests hoped to poach upon the American textile markets.

Unless the walkout is settled at once labor experts said it might drag on for weeks.

HOUSING PLAN TO GET EXPLANATION

R. A. Stuart, representative of the Federal Housing administration, will speak at a regional meeting at Big Spring Thursday, explaining to citizens of this area how to secure the benefits of government money which has been appropriated for the construction and remodeling of homes.

Midland was asked to have representatives there, in a letter from C. T. Watson, secretary of the Big Spring chamber of commerce to the chamber of commerce, county judge and newspaper.

Our government is seeking to place in circulation millions of dollars through the construction and remodeling of homes," Watson said.

The meeting will be held at the Big Spring city hall at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon, September 6.

Bruce Frazier Is B. S. Centennial Head

BIG SPRING.—Bruce Frazier has been named chairman of the Howard county Texas centennial committee.

Phillips has been selected as vice-chairman, Miss Nell Hatch as secretary-treasurer, W. G. Hayden, publicity director. Other members are Mrs. Ches Anderson, M. H. Morrison, and Mrs. L. L. Freeman.

It will be the work of the local committee to "dress up" the city during 1936 when the centennial will be held and to cooperate in all ways toward making the Lone Star state's 100th birthday an unequalled success.

Frazier was a member of the original Texas Centennial commission and was one of a group of individuals who gave $100 each in order to promote the centennial.

He is secretary of the Midland Production Credit corporation.

BRIGHTER ERA DAWNING FOR NATION'S LABOR

Observance of Labor day has had a dull gray tinge, in recent years, due to the unpleasant fact that the spirit of earnest toil which the day is supposed to commemorate hasn't been getting much chance to exercise itself.

It has been a little difficult to put on a good, old-fashioned Labor day celebration at a time when millions upon millions of erstwhile wage earners were out of work, had been out of work for months and saw little chance of being anything but out of work for months to come.

Now it would be very nice to report that Labor day of 1934 is different from its immediate predecessors in that unemployment has practically ceased—nice, but untrue, because, unfortunately, unemployment is still very much with us, and a great strike is on.

We can say that things are somewhat better than they were, and that the future is pretty encouraging—but, meanwhile, the American Federation of Labor estimates that there are something like 9,000,000 men who want work but have no jobs, and the federal government continues to spend millions of dollars every week for unemployment relief.

However, we can say one more thing, and by saying it can help to make Labor day far more significant than it has sometimes been even in eras of high prosperity.

We can truthfully say that the depression years have taught us to reassess our old ideas about the place of labor in organized society.

We have learned that the community is not healthy when labor is not wealthy; that unemployed workers mean trouble for farmer and banker and industrialist and white-collar worker; that we are all, in short, in the same boat, and that none of us will get along properly unless all of us are getting a fair break.

Once we fully realize this—and we are a lot nearer to its realization than we have ever been before, and this in spite of the great textile strike—the way will be open for labor to travel a much smoother road than it has traveled in the past. There will be less exploitation and more fairness; less class antagonism and more cooperation; less aimless drifting and more progress along the road to a broader, fuller richer life for every man which is the essence of the great American dream.

A greased pig escaped from a Chicago alderman at a ward picnic, which is one of the few times on record that a politician ever lost out on pork.

Communism is saturating our college youths, warns an educator. And all the while we thought it was beer that was making them sing "Sweet Adeline."

That Georgia golfer who missed a rattlesnake with his first brassie swing and killed it with the second seems to need a little coaching on his choice of clubs.

Chapter II

Jim, unable to meet the bright and penetrating eyes of the fallow individual, looked down and was stammering, "I... Truly, Sir... I..."

"No by the powers, and an end to it! If it comes to swinging, swing all, I say!"

Black Dog's oily murrain in reply was cut short by a roar from the Captain: "I'll part your dirty wig!" A chair fell with a crash and then Black Dog came dashing across the room, blood spurting from a gash in his shoulder. He knocked Jim aside in his mad effort to escape the raised cutlass of the pursuing Captain.

The encounter caused Mrs. Hawkins to make up her mind. She went to a neighbor to get him to send a man for Dr. Lawesey "to get that man out of here at once," she said to Jim. "I won't bear it a moment longer."

Jim returned to the tap-room at the Captain's roaring order for rum. "Are you hurt?" asked Jim.

"Rum! Rum!" thundered the Captain, and continued not speaking to Jim, it appeared to the boy, "Got to get away from here—slip my hawes! Rum! Rum! Jim!"

"If I don't have a dram o' rum I'll have the rum!" I'll see old Flint

"Black Dog as ever was!" cried that individual. "Come for to see his old shipmate. Ah, Bill, Bill, we've seen a sight of times, us two."

"You've run me down," said the Captain. "Well, then, speak up."

"No by the powers, and an end to it! If it comes to swinging, swing all, I say!"

there in the corner, behind you!"

"It's... is Flint the one-legged man?"

"No, but they'll both be here if you don't fetch me rum. Please, waddy, rum before they slip me the black spot!"

"W-w-what's the black spot?"

"That's a summons, matey. I ain't afraid of death. But a sea-faring man can't die sober, now can he?"

"Do they want to kill you?"

Gasped Jim, sea-chest they're after. I can't dandle 'em again; the boss'n's piped the whistle.

"What's in the sea-chest?" asked Jim, curiosity awakened.

"Matey, fetch me the rum and you can have any of it—" he fumbled nervously at his throat and drew forth a key on a chain. "Pieces of eight—and pearls as big as ostrich eggs—all the gold your heart desires—all for just a little noggin of rum, Jim."

Jim weakened at the man's evident distress and the prospect of such wealth to be had from the sea-chest. "Wouldn't porter do? I can—"

"Bilge, Jim! It's rum I need. If you don't, Jim, I'll have the horrors. And when I have the horrors I raise Cain. Please, matey—"

"W-w-will half a noggin do, Captain?"

The Captain sighed in profound relief. "A-a-a-a-h! My mate, Jim!" He winked enormously, his finger at the side of his nose.

Jim went outside to go down into the cellar for the rum when he heard a tap-tap-tapping sound coming along the road in the broad moonlight. It was a grotesque and horrible figure that met Jim's eyes. He was clothed in a huge tattered sea-cloak, a great green shade over his eyes and nose.

"Will any kind friend inform a poor blind man," he whined pitifully, seeing from some sixth sense to be aware of a human presence, what part of the country, he may now be?"

The blind man felt his way forward towards Jim who was frozen to the spot with horrors. Then his heart softened with pity at the blind man's plight. "You are at the Admiral Benbow, Black Hill Cove, sir."

"I hear a voice," said the blind man, sweetly and softly. "A young voice. Will you give me your hand, sir, and lead me in?"

Jim hesitated, repulsed by the man's appearance, yet helpless to refuse an act of kindness so badly needed. "O-o-certainly, sir."

He held out his hand and found his arm gripped in such a vice-like grasp that he cried out, "Oh, don't!"

"Now, boy," snarled the blind man, "take me to the Captain."

"Sir, upon my word, I dare not. O-o-oh!"

"Take me in straight or I'll break your arm!"

Jim, writhing in pain, gasped: "O-o-o-o-o, sir! This way, sir!" He opened the door and led the blind man in, and seated at a table his back to them, turned expecting the rum. At sight of the blind man his eyes bulged out in terror.

"Here's... here's a friend for you, Bill," said Jim, apologetically.

"Aye, Billy!" snarled the blind man. "Your friend, Pew. No, sit where you are, Bill. No drawn blades or cocked hammers. If I can't see I can hear a finger stirring. And business is business... Right to him, boy."

Petrified with horror, yet fanned by curiosity, Jim led the blind Pew forward to the Captain who stared at his visitor as though in a trance. Pew tapped the Captain on the shoulder.

"Ah, yes, Bill, Boy, take his left hand by the wrist and bring it near to my right," Pew passed something into the Captain's hand. "And now that's done," said Pew, turned and darted out of the room, his stick tapping on the floor.

Slowly the Captain lowered his eyes to a bit of paper in his hand. "Ten o'clock," he murmured, starting at a clock on the wall which indicated that it was five minutes to ten.

The Captain aroused himself from his trance, crying, "But, we'll do them yet! They'll not have a doubt-loom!" He turned and threw himself upstairs, wobbling from side to side, his voice rising sharply. "I fought and bled for it! It's mine—mine! I'll swing on Execution Dock before I'll—"

His shrieking ended in a terrible gurgle as his hands flew to his throat. Then he fell backward, down the stairs, as Mrs. Hawkins hurried into the tap-room from the back.

"Jim!" she cried. "What has hap—?" She saw the Captain's body come sliding down the stairs, uttered a scream and hurried to it. "He's dead!"

Jim ran down, slammed and bolted the inn door.

"They'll be back again!" he exclaimed, breathlessly. "Men who want to kill the Captain. They're after the treasure in his chest upstairs!"

"We've got to run—get away from here!" cried his mother.

"No, mother. The captain owes us money. He offered me the key to the chest. We'll get what he owes us first. They can't take that." With a shudder, he knelt by the body and broke the chain holding the key to the chest.

"Jim—I'm frightened!" cried Mrs. Hawkins.

"I'll be no harm comes to you, mother. I'm not afraid. Hurry!" He ran ahead upstairs and had the chest unlocked when she waited in after him. She brought the lamp from the table, saying: "Well, I'll show them I'm honest. We'll take our due—not a farthing more."

Jim hurriedly pulled out the contents of the chest—some good clothes neatly folded, a quadrant, a tin canikin, several sticks of tobacco, two braces of pistols, a piece of bar silver, an old Spanish watch, a pair of brass-mounted compasses, a canvass bag that jingled and other trinkets. "Why there's nothing here at all!" he exclaimed in disappointment.

"Some coins in here, though." His mother opened the canvass bag and began counting out the coins due her, while Jim started to unwrap a small bundle tied up in oil-cloth. A blind man's whistle started them. After a second there came a loud banging on the inn door. Mrs. Hawkins dropped the bag. "I'll take what have," she cried and ran down stairs. Jim followed, the oil-

I've heard a lot of tales about the recent elections, some of which I believe and some I don't. All I will do in connection with this story is to ask if you believe it. Any-way they do tell that when Holly Roberts was out after preched one votes he went to a farm house, found the lady putting out a washing and offered to help her.

"Sure," she said. "You just take charge of that scrub board. Old Man Whitmore has gone to the well after some more water and will be back any minute."

The mourning doves may be mourning because the prairie chicken hunters didn't get any chickens and had to take it out on the doves.

"Hallelujah" is a popular European name for the wood sorrel, of the geranium family; this name is due to the fact that the plant flowers between Easter and Whitsuntide.

Judging from a story emanating from Wink, everything comes to him who waits. Judge S. M. Halley, known to the old-timers around Midland as Hunter, got re-elected county judge by 101 votes, then an oil well was brought in on his ranch and immediately afterward he got a two inch rain over his pastures.

You can't keep a good man down.

The near opening of school and the opening of the hunting season called to the mind of R. H. Shuffler over at Odessa the following essay on geese, as written by a school boy:

"Geese is a low heavy-set bird which is mostly meat and feathers. His head sits on one side and sing much on account of dampness of the moistures. He ain't cloth bundle in his hands. The fierce pounding on the door recoubed in violence. "No use holding out, Bill!" cried a voice. "No tricks, now! Hurry! Open the door!"

Woman's Beauty Quest Is Theme of Amusing Film

Since time began woman has been asking for an answer to her plea: "I want to be beautiful." And Paramount's "Kiss and Make-Up," the romantic tale of the handsome young beauty doctor, to whom women flock for treatment but remain for love, uses this eternal theme for its story.

Featuring Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin, Helen Mack and Edward Everett Horton, "Kiss and Make-Up" showing at the Ritz theatre today and tomorrow.

Mona Maris, Toby Wing, Henry Armetta, Dorothy Christy and the thirteen Wampus Baby Stars of 1934 appear in supporting roles in the film which was directed by Harlan Thompson and Jean Negulesco from a play by Stephen Beckell, Viennese playwright.

Amid songs, music and lavish settings, "Kiss and Make-Up" tells how the intriguing young doctor marries his most perfect synthetic beauty, only to meet disappointment and to return to his demure little secretary.

Harvard University is conducting a series of tests as a study of fatigue.

The code provided minimum wages of $13 in the North and $12 in the South on the maximum 40-hour week basis. But cotton mill workers have since been averaging 36 hours of work a week, so that their average wage prior to curtailment was about $13.32, while lowest paid workers were averaging but $10.80 instead of the so-called code minimum.
