"Nothing to Live for," Is Poison Victim's Answer

A pretty 23-year-old woman who lies critically ill of poisoning allegedly self-administered about 9 o'clock last night, told physicians of a Midland hospital this morning, "No one will ever know why I did it."
Mrs. Annice Barker, who said her husband, Ed, lives at Lubbock and her mother, Mrs. Minnie Bee, at 803 Munday street, El Paso, registered at a Midland hotel three nights ago. Officers claimed she took about six bichloride of mercury tablets on a third attempt. The first time, they said, a porter stopped her as she tried to swallow tablets which assertedly had been sent to her room. The second time, they said, she tried to buy the poison at a drug store and it was refused her. On the third attempt, however, she managed to take them.

DISTRICT COURT DOCKET IS READ

The case against three Odessa negroes, held over for the grand jury after the fatal shooting here recently of another Odessa negro, was not set, inasmuch as the grand jury had not reported. The jury was charged Monday morning, but was dismissed until today following a memorial service said in honor of the late George W. Durnaway, Midland attorney.

Twenty-four divorce cases are on the docket.

The most interesting civil action slated is the civil case of Rimecs company vs. Gulf Production company.

Balance Exemption Certificates Here

Balance of tax exemption certificates for Midland county, the balance amounting to 127,620 pounds, has been received here. This allotment was made on farms which had not been planted to cotton prior to 1934 and was made out of the 10 per cent reserve withheld from the state allotment to safeguard the western sections where farms are still being cleared and planted to cotton.

Effort Is Made to Increase Oil Quota

AUSTIN, Oct. 30. (U.P.)—A determined effort was made Monday to secure increased allowable oil production for the Conroe field at the statewide prorating hearing. It was said that the field can produce double its present quota without reducing the pressure.

Oil Notes

By F. D. GARDNER
Operators are still swabbing the Landreth No. 1 in section 22, block 44, township 1 north, T. & P. survey. Location of the Landreth No. 1 Schriber is in section 20, block 44, township 1 north, T. & P. survey.

Landreth's No. 1 J. L. Johnson, a wildcat test midway between the Addick and North Ector pools, in section 47, block 43, township 1 south, Ector county, is underreaming 10 inch pipe to the total depth of 1095 feet.

In the southwest corner of Glasscock county Wahlenmaker et al No. 1 Boyd, much discussed test in section 9, block 36, township 5 south, is drilling in red rock at 2550 feet. The deep test in section 22, block 34, township 2 south, Moore et al No. 1 McDowell, has progressed to 6020 feet in white lime.

Seven inch o.d. casing has been run to around 4450 feet in the Honolulu No. 1 Parker, interesting Andrews county wildcat which had an oil show at the present total depth of 4827 feet. The first cement job having been unsuccessful, casing was drilled clear and then perforated in the 2 bottom joints. Fifty sacks were then pumped through the perforations up around the outside of the pipe, and operators are now waiting for the cement to set. Drilling probably will be resumed toward the end of the week.

The No. 1 Parker prospect is located in section 7, block A-44, public school land survey.

SUCH A BIG, WONDERFUL, BUSY WORLD!

Dolls and playthings have been added to the complications of a world that grows daily before the wide eyes of the Dionne quintuplets. Here are all five of the husky young ladies, Yvonne, Annette, Cecile, Emilie and Marie, now grown to such a size that Dr. Dufoe believes they have a good chance to live and thrive as ordinary babies. They seem to enjoy the knitted jackets and new finery they display.

Cattle May Act Like Wild Bulls Of The Pampas

PECOS—Sotol weed, famous up and down the Rio Grande as a base for the fiery Mexican liquor of the same name, is being put to other, and some people think, better uses.

Instead of being converted into an alcoholic stimulant, it will be used in its natural state for cattle feed. Bill Kingston, Reeves county rancher, this week purchased a machine for the cutting of the sotol plant into short lengths.

The machine cost about $450, and can turn out a ton every hour. It can cut the leaves and heart of the plant into extremely small lengths, so that it can be handled with a fork and can be fed to the cattle in troughs.

"We have to feed them something," Kingston is quoted as saying, "and now that there's hardly any grass, we have to feed them the sotol. We figure that about ten pounds a day ought to be enough for each animal."

Kingston's ranch is located at the eastern edge of the Davis mountain range.

State officials said two were killed because they knew too much about the escape which cost Dillinger $1,800.

ANGLO-AMERICAN HOPE IS QUASHED

LONDON, Oct. 30. (U.P.)—American hope for unequivocal British support against Japanese demands for naval equality seemed quashed today. Great Britain was opposing the demands of Japan for a "global alignment whereby the nations would be free to build ships of such size and class as desired within a specific tonnage, but was more ready than the United States to grant to Japan naval equality.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (U.P.)—Fortification of Pacific naval bases today was recognized as likely should disarmament treaties collapse.

He was treated by a Midland doctor and it is expected he will have recovered completely within 20 or 25 days.

In addition to those two he will take his bay thoroughbred geldings, Foreign Relations and George Keith, and the Paul Harvey colt, Dutch Veda, a consistent winner in the half and five eighths distances.

posed amendments to the Texas constitution. Tom Hunter, you may remember, was Alford's opponent in the run-off campaign for governor last August. The great tragedy: The first wrinkle on a beautiful woman's face. But I don't mind the double chin. The double chin makes a woman appear good natured. Breakfast Must Be Made Attractive For Finicky Child

By MARY E. DAGUE NEA Service Staff Writer "Aw, I donwanna eat any breakfast!" In far too many homes that whining plaint starts the day, voiced by the child who is finicky about food. Pretty often this is mother's own fault, whether she knows it or not. Ten chances to one, half the trouble is because either breakfast has degenerated into such a hurried meal that the child's appetite is taken away by a fear that he is going to be late for school, or else the whole is planned and served so carelessly and unattractively that nobody who was not starving would want it.

Well, something has to be done about that, and something can. Careless ventilation and the wrong bed covers the night before may make a child quite indifferent to his breakfast. Allow 15 Minutes Leeway Be sure to allow plenty of time for eating breakfast and allow at least fifteen minutes between the time he finishes his meal and the time he must start to school. Set the table with fresh linen or dollies and gay china. Don't get into a menu rut, either. Use the less acid fruits alternately with stewed fruits to make a change in the first course. Tomato juice pleasantly chilled and carefully seasoned with lemon juice may take the place of orange juice occasionally. Cereals may be of the cooked or ready-to-serve variety. Serve with plenty of rich milk or cream and make full use of the wide variety of grains. Something hot aids digestion and may be provided by a cup of hot milk or cocoa made with milk if a ready-to-serve cereal is used. Eggs may be cooked in numberless ways. Or creamed meat or creamed vegetable on toast with a garnish of crisp bacon makes an acceptable warm dish. Have the toast crisp so the child will chew it well. It's a good idea to serve toast with cooked cereal and muffins or rolls with ready-to-serve cereal.

FEMININE FANCIES

BY KATHLEEN EILAND

Just because every woman likes descriptions of the dress of a princess from the time she first reads about Cinderella at the ball, we're re-printing this dispatch from a woman news correspondent in Paris.

Silver brides are going to be the fashion show now. A real Princess has set this style and it is destined to be followed by shop girls and debutantes all over the world.

Princess Marina of Greece, whose marriage to Prince George of Great Britain on November 29 in Westminster Abbey will be one of the biggest social events in recent history, has chosen silver lame woven in an English rose pattern for her wedding dress. This selection has the approval of Queen Mary, who also has acquiesced to the young Princess' desire to have her bridesmaids gowned in heavy white crepe woven with a fine tracery of silver thread.

Marina's gown will be made with extreme simplicity, the four-yard Court train lined entirely with cloth of silver. It will fall from the shoulders. She will wear a coronet of diamonds from which will fall a rare lace veil, an heirloom of the family and in which her mother, the Grand Duchess Helen, and her sister, the Princess Paul, both were married. It will be combined with diaphanous folds of silvery tulle, completely covering the train. Her slippers will be of the same fabric as her gown, rose-woven lame, and the line of her gown is Princess, with the slightly high waist of the Moyen Age.

Up in New York state, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Perkins, who have been married for 62 years, are giving a novel recipe for happiness in married life.

In effect, they say that a scrap every day keeps divorce away.

It's all owing, we suppose to whether a couple prefers a storm to a calm.

For the first time in 60 years, Harvard will give a dinner for a football rival. Princeton will be feasted at a banquet Nov. 3, after the grid game.

We always maintain that the brotherly attitude is increasing in the world. (Incidentally we hope players don't forget and start hurling china.)

Redskins Best Potato Diggers PORT FAIRFIELD, Me. (U.P.)—The white race can't begin to compete with the Indian when it comes to potato-digging, many an Aroostook County farmer believes. The Nightingale Seed Company, local potato farm employs only Redskins, who consider potato-digging more of a contest than a daily grind.

Methodists Hosts To Fifth-Monday Meeting

Musical and reading numbers were featured on the program presented at the Methodist church Monday afternoon when members of the Methodist missionary society were hosts to other missionary societies of the town in a regular fifth-Monday meeting.

Mrs. Jno. Ratliff sang "Some-where a Voice is Calling," accompanied by Mrs. Holt Jowell.

The high school quartet sang a sacred selection.

Miss Lucille McMullan read "No Cross, No Crown." The devotional was read by Mrs. J. S. Noland.

Miss Mary Belle Pratt was at the piano during the social hour which followed the program.

Representatives were present from the Baptist, Church of Christ, Presbyterian, Christian, Episcopal, and Catholic churches.

Refreshments were served to about 127 women.

Mrs. Fletcher Currie was in charge of the serving. She was assisted by Meses. J. S. Noland, J. M. Speed, Luther Tidwell, Klebold, Guffy, Sims, and Ellis Connor.

If all the money in this country were distributed equally to every man, woman, and child, the per capita rate would be $42.50. The actual distribution, however, every $100 is divided by one person having $59, another $9, 22 more $26.84, and the remaining $5.16 is divided between 76 persons, according to one statistician.

"Wake up and Dream"

From screenplay by John Meehan Jr.

Chapter XV

Charley Sullivan, ex-vaudeville player, amateur promoter, business manager, triumphed over Charley Sullivan, curly-headed young fellow in love, as he stood outside of the house in which Paul Scott, his ex-partner, was celebrating the success of his second motion picture. Charley had made two distinct promises this evening which he would keep within the next few minutes.

Inside the house there was gaiety, laughter, Toby, the girl he worshipped, and Paul, whom he loved like a brother, with whom he had tramped for more than ten years and whose affairs he now managed.

For a moment, he leaned against a pillar on the veranda. He listened vaguely to the song which Paul was singing in the living room of the house with the star who appeared in motion pictures with him. But he was rubbing the right side of his nose the while, proving that he was having at least one potent idea.

He knew that Toby was upstairs, packing her clothes—that she would leave the house that they all had shared—he and Paul and Toby and Luigi Cellini, Paul's foster-father—within the next few minutes. When Mae and Paul stopped singing and were greeted by a round of generous applause, he went into action.

He walked into the living room, grabbed Paul by the arm, led him to the hallway and up the stairs to the second floor. When they reached the top of the stairs, Paul asked him what it was all about. He explained as best he could, and told Paul to go right to Toby's room and see her talk to her. When the latter protested, he said:

"I'm telling you, you're going in there and talk to her—or else!"—he threatened.

Paul tried to pass the whole thing off by assuming a kidding attitude, saying:

"As a manager, you're tremendous—but you're forgetting there's a blonde down stairs, and you're wasting a lot of my time."

"Listen, sonny boy," counseled Charley, trying to assume the same bawling tone, "we've been together for a long time and we've never had any trouble. I don't want to have any with you now."

He paused a moment, tried not to spill over and let Paul know how he really felt. "Don't make me go sentimental about this, will you?" he pleaded.

"Toby's not a moment," he pressed. "It's you. And she's going to have what she wants if I have to hit you over the head and chase all the blondes out of Hollywood to get you."

Paul was still trying to kid his way out of the situation. He said:

"You'd better run along and have another nip. When the fever dies down, you'll be all right."

"I'm telling you what she just told me," said Charley, frantically. "She's in there—in her room—packing her trunk now. What're you going to let her do—run away with you clown around with a dame who doesn't mean anything to you or anybody else?"

Paul began to be convinced.

"Are you sure, he asked, "that you know what you're doing?"

"I was never surer," replied Charley fervently.

The full realization of what Charley was doing struck Paul, finally, right between the eyes.

"You're quite a fellow," he said, sincerely.

Charley cut him short with:

"That's what I've always told you, haven't I?"

Paul caught his glance, held it.

"Paul turned, went down the upstairs hallway, and without knocking deliberately walked into Toby's room. She was packing, as Charley said she would be. From the living room came the strains of one of the melodies which Paul had written and had sung to her many times. As the door latch clicked, Toby turned. She had a scarf which she had been about to place in her trunk in her hand. There were still tears in her eyes.

She looked at Paul as he looked at her. They held each other's eyes for a long moment. Then she faltered:

"He—told you—didn't he?"

Paul didn't answer. He simply said smiling:

"Come here, you!"

Toby didn't know quite what to do. She turned back toward the trunk. She gasped:

"No! Go away!"

He did just the opposite. He while she turned, turned her around, tilted up her chin with his hand.

"You don't suppose I've meant any of the stuff I've been saying and doing, do you?" he asked.

She looked up at him, shook her head and with a very small voice said:

"No!"

He took her in his arms.

Charley had a second promise to keep. After finishing with Paul he went down stairs and cornered Cellini, who was gnawing on another sandwich. He gave him a few terse instructions, disappeared fully armed, turned a seat in a little bay window, pulled the drapes in front of it, and settled down to some serious cramming.

Madame Rose, hot in pursuit of him, suspected that he might be behind those very drapes. She tipped to them and with a sudden jerk of a cord sent them flying apart. There sat Cellini and his sandwich. He very nearly choked on it as she exclaimed, delightedly:

"Ah, you naughty boy! You've been hiding. You just wanted to make me find you, didn't you?"

Cellini, carefully coached by Charley, gave a fine dramatic exhibition, waving his arm hopelessly, as he replied:

"No, my dear Madame Rose. That is not so. I hide myself away from the world because I am suffering."

All solitude, the good woman sank to the seat beside him.

"Suffering?" she asked. "My poor little one—tell me!"

"It's because you are so beautiful!" exclaimed Cellini, forgetting his sandwich for a moment.

"Oh!" said the woman, clasping her hands. "Oh!"

"It is because you are so lovely—your eyes—your hair—"

She swayed toward him, lost in ecstasy.

"My Cellini!" she managed to gasp, as Cellini dejectedly discarded the sandwich, dropped his head in his hands.

"I am no good!" he moaned. "I have lied to you!"

"What?" she exclaimed, unbelievably.

"Yes," he said, brokenly. "In Italy, I have a wife and seven kids!"

Madame Rose, stampeded by this news, staggered to her feet. She placed her hand to her forehead as she reeled under the shock, but soon recovered herself to hurl at him:

"Imposter! Heartbreaker!" she exclaimed, spluttering a little, and added, "you snake in the grass!"

Her loud tones had attracted Eggehead, wandering nearby, looking for her. He came into the little alcove, eyed the strange tableau. Seeing that Cellini was on the spot, he grinned happily. His egotism turned on him.

"Eghead! My crystal!" she demanded, imperiously.

Eghead fumbled in a pocket, which finally disgorged the shining globe. He handed it to Madame Rose, his smile growing wider and wider. She took it, glared into it, glared at Cellini. With a gesture of disgust and dismissal of both the crystal and the Italian, she hurled the glass ball through the window behind him.

Regally pulling herself up, Madame Rose stalked toward Cellini's sight. Cellini shook hands with himself. Eggehead shook hands with him. He shook hands with Eggehead. Eggehead looked around to be sure that his erstwhile light of life was gone and then reached for his sandwich, which he had caught behind him. He smiled happily as he found it was still intact.

The evening was not yet over. Paul and Toby marched to the balcony on the stairs, summoned Charley, who came to them, his heart in his eyes. The trio whispered for a moment, then Charley turned to the orchestra. The musicians stopped playing. Everyone looked up at him as he held up his hand for silence. Among those watching were Ben Goldfarb and his big moment, Mae La Rue.

There was a hush of interest. Charley's hand was raised and he said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, may I have quiet, please? The party tonight is not only in celebration of a new picture—it's a double celebration."

"It gives me great pleasure and happiness to announce the engagement of Mr. Paul Scott to Miss Toby."

Charley stepped aside, waved his arm in the direction of Paul and Toby, who stood proudly on the landing. They smiled. Paul tucked Toby's arm through his and they began their march to the main floor to receive congratulations from the admiring throng which waited to receive them.

Only one woman didn't care to have anything more to do with Toby, Paul or the party. She was Mae La Rue. Mae grabbed Ben Goldfarb, steered him toward the nearest door without ceremony—and Goldfarb was smiling happily. Paul was his friend again. His romance was secure.

For a moment, Charley wistfully watched Toby and Paul receiving their congratulations. Then he turned and quietly sneaked out of the living room. No one saw him go, apparently.

He found Hildebrand sitting in a chair in the hallway. At the sight of Charley, Hildebrand jumped to his feet eagerly. Charley stopped, looked at Hildebrand for a moment, and then put his arm around his shoulder.

Toby and Paul were singing happily together in the living room, and their voices could be heard distinctly. Charley cocked an ear for a moment then, eyeing Hildebrand closely, said, whimsically:

"Well—little man—what now?"

The End.

Home Brewed

Stanton lost to Wink 53-0, but dropped its Saturday billing with Peecs only 1-0. As Midland was able to take a 13-12 spirited set to Wink the comparative strength of Wink and Peecs would appear to carry a considerable margin—until one recalls 1-0 decisions are based on forfeiture.

Stanton of necessity had to call off the Peecs game. Advice coming over to the western hamlet, says the Bufts suffered so many casualties in the Wink game of two weeks ago practice sessions have almost been temporarily stopped. Coach Bostick, whom we seem to recall was a Frog somewhere back in the past, announced his injury list included five regulars, Pollock, Yates, Donelson, Hamner and Louger, as well as three reserves, Henry Houston, Turner and Springer.

There is some possibility the hospital list may not round into condition by the time of the Midland-Stanton date. In case Stanton calls off the game it will be the first time such has happened in the history of the two institutions' grid relationship.

In a day or two we'll try to start Peecs publicly, including the club's season record, its roster, band and pep squad, number of those expected to make the safari here and the rest of the dope. We haven't heard from the Peecs coach yet.

Maybe this is where Texas U men of other days base their coaching principles. Uncle Billy Discen, whose name is a fetish to South-west conference baseball, commands the same respect from old grads he did when they were taking paper and pencil and shower bath on University hill.

"None of us would think of smoking before Uncle Billy on returns to the old school," said Dutch Baumgartner, Midland coach.

Pete Cawthon, mentor at the up and coming Texas Tech, lives most when one of his men is caught smoking. The athletic is almost certain to hide the offending cigarette or cigarette behind him or to ram his fist in his pocket and hope the coach drifts off before something begins burning. Hard-boiled Pete, as his exes endearingly dub him, keeps his map as impassive as a dead Indian, stands around and discusses the weather. Mae West turned to the assembly below, as he always does, and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, may I have quiet, please? The party tonight is not only in celebration of a new picture—it's a double celebration."

LONGHORN COACH BLAMES BACKS

AUSTIN, Oct. 30. (AP)—Jack Chevigny and his coaching staff yesterday held a post-mortem over the defeat administered their University of Texas Longhorns by the Rice Owls at Houston Saturday and came to the conclusion that an inexperienced backfield was to blame.

"Inexperience of my backfield, particularly in the fourth period when Bill Wallace tossed the winning touchdown pass to Ray Smith, was the cause of our defeat," Chevigny said. "Instead of looking for a pass, as they should have, my backs were 'sucked' in as Wallace faked an oftackle play. When the Owls' player actually passed, his receiver was out in the open for a touchdown." Texas was leading 9-7 with three minutes to go when Wallace uncorked his now famous pass.

FILL THOSE EMPTY SOCKETS

It is considered poor housekeeping to have torn shades or faded draperies, and it is just as bad to leave empty light sockets in ceiling and wall fixtures. Not only do these vacant sockets, or sockets filled with blackened and burned-out globes look bad, but the decreased amount of light detracts from the appearance of the room.
