TOUCHDOWN QUARTET OF NOTRE DAME RAMBLERS

Here's the touchdown manufacturing company of Notre Dame, Inc. The Ramblers have another great football team in the field this year and much of its fire and dash is to be found in this quartet. Lukats and Brincheau are halfbacks, Jaskovich plays quarterback and Kosky holds an end position. They'll be called on for heavy duty when Notre Dame tackles the mighty Pitt eleven at Pittsburgh Oct. 29. (Associated Press Photo)

"Jim's prediction of a 500,000 majority is nothing but whistling through the graveyard. Farmer Jim is a front porch farmer and the only thing he ever milked is the state of Texas."

"The Democratic and Republican parties are no more involved in this fight than in the election of your school board."

"Greater than gold, treasures, silver, and material wealth, there is at stake the good name and honor of Texas. The same blood that saved West Texas from rustlers and thieves will save it now, and make it a glorious victory for responsibility and honesty in government."

Fox stripping called the house to order, introducing Judge S. H. Morrison who in turn introduced Bullington.

Irregularity

Scoring James E. Ferguson for party irregularity, dishonesty, and maladministration, Morrison said no man had the right to be elected in fact when law prevented his being elected in name.

"We gave him one chance after his impeachment and he was worse instead of better," shouted Morrison.

are admitted to the concerts except in case of out-of-town guests, who may be admitted for a fee to one or more concerts under conditions fixed by the committee in charge.

So, the campaign being made to sell 350 memberships, the minimum, and bring civic music to Big Spring, is not a "drive" for a cause but is designed to drain any firm or individual. It is simply an opportunity for those individuals who love good music to avail themselves of a rare opportunity to hear such a fine concert as this one.

It is very important from a purely commercial standpoint that the minimum of 350 memberships be sold. We would not make an appeal for the sale of memberships solely on a commercial basis. One of Big Spring's principal evils is that she thinks too selfishly commercial at best.

But, if this matter is put over Big Spring will have made the first and most important step toward its own improvement by the music and entertainment center of a wide section of West Texas. She will in the future be the converging point for thousands of people from neighboring towns and counties who like the best of concerts.

free and immune from teaching religious error."

The speaker divided his lecture into three parts, saying in the first part that Christ guaranteed this infallibility; in the second that the Apostles of Christ understood that Christ had guaranteed it, and in the third he spoke of the effects of this infallibility.

For an hour the missionary held the absolute attention of his listeners and used many texts from the New Testament in corroboration of his statements.

Duty Of Parents

In his morning talk, Father McGrath, in explaining the commandment "honor thy father and mother," spoke on the duties of parents toward their children.

He dwelt somewhat fully on parental obligation of giving good example to their offspring and of correcting them.

"The old proverb," he said, "that we heard years ago that runs 'monkey see, monkey do' never had a better application than in connection with small children. They are perfect little monkeys when it comes to imitating what they see and hear in and from their parents. And it is only natural that they should. They love their parents, look up to them with admiration and respect and hence consider father and mother as paragons of perfection and models to be imitated."

The priest drew a smile from his listeners when he told how his sister one day punished her little three year old girl by making her stand for 20 minutes in a corner with her face to the wall. "I hate to punish you, but when you are a bad girl mother has to do it," the mother said, as the child took her place in the corner, the speaker said "and after about twenty minutes called her to her side and said, 'now if you think you can be a good girl and do what mother says, you can go out and play.'" The child promised faithfully and was allowed to leave the corner.

"In five minutes here comes the little child, dragging her father's

Republicans Ask Supervisors Of Election; Law Governing Removal To New Voting Precinct Is Cited

In view of intention of local Republicans to ask for supervisors at voting places here during the general election, November 8, County Judge H. R. Debenport and County Attorney James Little Thursday called attention to provisions of the election laws applying to persons who have moved since paying their poll tax to another voting precinct, or who have lost their poll tax receipts.

The law (article 2967 Vernon's Annotated statutes) provides that no person who has lost his poll tax receipt or who has moved to a new voting precinct, or to another county since paying his poll tax may vote in the general election in a town of more than 10,000 population unless he has at least four days prior to the day of the election presented to the tax collector of his home county his poll tax receipt or certificate of exemption. The law further provides that the tax collector shall add his name to the list of qualified voters of the precinct, and to quote the statute "unless such voter has done this and his name appears in the certified list of voters of the precinct of his new residence he shall not vote."

In an opinion of an appellate court (149 Southwestern Reporter 785, Linger vs. Balfour) the court said "under this article (2967) the voter moves from one precinct to another in the same county."

Country Women To Be Guests At Tea Tuesday Afternoon

All-county women, regardless of affiliation with clubs, are invited to the tea to be given at the Federation Clubhouse Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

A short musical program will be given and an informal discussion will be held concerning the formation of a County Federation.

Tea will be served at the close of the program.

Members of the federation who have been anxious to form a County Federation want to know the desire of the county women. Many have expressed their interest already, said Mrs. Joyce Fisher, president of the City Federation. She asked that others who are interested be present. No invitations are extended except through the paper. The meeting is thrown open to all women in the city and the county and a large attendance is expected in order that the true sentiment of the women can be known at once and the county federation get under way soon.

CALL of the WEST

By R. G. MONTGOMERY

CHAPTER XXXII

Don rode down the trail slowly. Stan Ball's black mare did not want to go. The horse kept turning her head and edging off the trail. But she remembered that her master had given her orders to obey the slender girl so she made a half-hearted attempt to step along.

The lumberjack who was acting as Dona's escort did not seem to mind riding slowly. He was out of place in the saddle and his big, rawboned frame jolted up and down when his horse trotted.

Torn between a wild eagerness to be back with her father and fear that all was not well on the back trail, Dona rode along. Dudley scarcely entered her thoughts. So many strange things had happened in the past week, so many amazing twists of fate, that life had begun to seem unreal. Always a girl who made decisions rapidly and drove straight to a finish, she was surprised at her present state of uncertainty.

She could not understand Stanley Ball with his clear gray eyes, his chivalry toward her and his fearlessness in the face of death itself. How could a man like that be an outlaw and killer? The question kept pounding in her brain as she rode.

The black mare's hoofs clicked on the trail with an even rhythm, but to Dona they sounded like the beating of the same drum.

man pulled his horse to a stop. "No use to butt in," he growled. "I'm going back! It will be plain murder!" The girl's eyes were amber and her lips trembling. The dull fellow beside her drew a deep breath of admiration at Dona's striking beauty, but he shook his head. "All over by now," he grunted.

Dona took in the situation at a glance. Her companion was unbalanced in his saddle. One leg was cast over the horn. His gun hung from his hip on her side while his big hands rested on the saddle horn. He was drinking in the picture she made with a lightning movement. Dona lashed out with her quirt at the same time swinging the black mare up against the other horse. The lashing leather strips cut across the fellow's eyes and cheeks, blinding him. Dona reached over and jerked his gun loose, then cut his horse cruelly across its flanks. The animal snorted and leaped into the air. Like a big sack of meal, the man sailed into the air and landed in a heap on the ground.

Dona did not wait to see if her victim awoke. She sent the black thundering up the black trail. Would she be in time? The question pounded in her brain to the beat of the black mare's hoofs. Stan's horse fairly flew up the trail to the same place. Dona had admitted that she was guilty of all the charges against him. That means he had shot her father, killed a ranger and wounded several men. Dona was back exactly where she had started. But a man who had created such a name would not be treated with the respect and dignity that Ball had shown each time they had met.

The escort was riding ahead now. He had eased himself in the saddle by throwing one leg around the horn and his body tilted awkwardly as his horse plodded along. Dona watched him narrowly.

She slowed her horse a little to see if he were watching her out of the tail of his eye. The man slowed, too, and she knew that he was keeping a close check on her movements. Suddenly Dona pushed the mare ahead and rode abreast of him.

"Do you suppose they'll let me job done yet?" she asked, which they had come to.

The man looked at her and grinned. "They'll bring you down the trail a ways, then. He'll be upward with the thumb and the grin widened.

Dona's lips went white. "I'm going back to put a stop to it," she cried.

On the Evasiveness of Candidates

During a presidential campaign the country is divided the way the orators cultivate the illusion that the country is divided into two distinct parties. But when the election is over and the business of government is resumed, it quickly transpires that national party lines are almost meaningless and that on all important issues the decisions are arrived at by a grouping of factions. The occasions when a President is the leader of a united party against a united opposition are so rare in our political history as to count as exceptions to the general rule. In the normal situation the President leads a coalition made up in part of his nominal supporters and in part of his nominal opponents.

Consider, for example, the experience of Mr. Coolidge in dealing with the highly contentious McNary-Haugen bill in the Sixty-ninth Congress. Mr. Coolidge vetoed that bill and for the purpose of the ensuing presidential campaign the Republican party is counted as opposed by that type of legislation.

press you find that in the House 122 Republicans, constituting 53.6 per cent of the Republican membership, voted for it and 97 Democratic members; you find that in the Senate 24 Republicans, or 48.6 per cent of their party voted for it, and 27 Democrats, or 55.6 per cent of their party.

Examples of this sort could be multiplied indefinitely from the records of almost every Congress including, of course, the present one. In the actual alignment of forces in Congress there are no national parties and it would be no serious exaggeration to say that we have national parties only for the purpose of electing a President and of distributing Federal offices. Once the offices have been distributed, once the power of patronage is exhausted the President must find his support where he can in the temporary grouping of blocs.

Our government is constructed in such a way that president must be chosen under a two-party system. For all practical purposes there is no way of obtaining one President out of a multitude of parties if none of these parties commands a majority in the electoral college. Were there three or more parties of almost equal strength there would be no election; the decision would be made directly by vote of the people, but by Congress. This is the reason why third parties have never had any permanent strength in the United States. The Presidential system is such that the third party must either become the second party promptly or content itself with being an educational and propagandist society.

Because of the compulsion exercised by the presidential system, the real opinions of the American people do not find expression in national campaigns. Both candidates are hated uncertainly on a party structure which is fundamentally discordant and is kept harmonious only by the most carefully calculated ambiguity. The harmony is temporary, purely for the sake of the Presidential campaign, and to maintain that harmony for a few months requires the sacrifice of candor and the resort to all manner of ignoble compromise.

Under the spell of partisanship it is easy to imagine that the other candidate is the timid and evasive fellow, and that your man is the bold and forthright one. But this is a hallucination of a campaign which makes it so difficult to carry out Mr. Coolidge's do not know of a campaign where either candidate ever took a decisive stand on a controversial matter unless it was more dangerous for him not to take the stand than to take it. The political system is organized against candor, and those who have put the Presidential ambition aside ever practice candor consistently.

There is a famous chapter in Bryce's "The American Commonwealth" written more than forty years ago on "Why Great Men Are Not Chosen President." Among the reasons which Bryce gives, the chief one is that eminent men make enemies and are, therefore, less desirable candidates and "party feeling, strong enough to carry in on its back a man without conspicuous positive merits, is not always strong enough to procure forgiveness for a man with positive faults." The situation has not changed much since Bryce wrote this passage, and it is rather significant to note that of the three Presidents of first rank in that period, one, Cleveland, was rejected by his party when he adhered too boldly to his convictions, and the other two, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, would probably never have become President but for accidents.

In fact, since the establishment of the direct primary, the obstacles to the rise of the able men have enormously increased. For it is far difficult to repel voters than to attract them, and every real conviction publicly expressed drives away some part of the candidate's following. That is why in the last decade or so the technique of evasiveness has been brought to such high perfection in our public life.

Blue Bloods Of Long Island In Bitter Campaign

NEW YORK (UP)—A furious tempest seethed and bubbled in the silver and crystal tea pot of Long Island society.

Battling with garden parties and tea cups Cornelius Vanderbilt (Sunny) Whitney—one of the Whiteheads—and Robert Low Bacon, a blue blood himself, entered the final phase of their contest to represent this land of milk, honey and ancestral mansions in congress.

Never before has Long Island been so ripped up and torn apart. Friends of long standing are bitterly on speaking terms. Mrs. Gladwyn Whitney, wife of sunny, even had had doors slammed against her aristocratic nose.

Bacon, wealthy publisher, has been in congress since 1922. He is a great social favorite. His brand of conservative republicanism was approved by wealthy families, mostly all republican. His right to office hasn't been seriously questioned, until this year. Then Whitney, weary of polo, his string of race horses and the management of his hundred, some odd millions, decided to begin a public career as a democratic candidate for Bacon's office.

Bacon and Whitney were fast enemies. Bacon, a quakeress, Mrs. Bacon and Mrs. Whitney avoid meeting as much as possible. Barclay McKee Henry, Whitney's brother-in-law, is working for Bacon.

Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. William Goadby Loew, and Mrs. Geo. F. Baker, for instance, the Whitney went over to the Bacon camp.

Whitney, mindful of the habitual republicanism of his friends, campaigns for the votes of the common people. He campaigns from the tonneau of a sixteen seater automobile. Clad in neatly tailored woods, he discusses pressing issues with a stent crowd leaping out to shake hands with some friend's butler. Mrs. Whitney, guarding herself against the cold in a $5,000 sable coat, distributes campaign literature and shakes hands with house maids and the wives of unemployed workers.

The Long Island Roosevelt are for Bacon to a man. A rumor that Mrs. Franklin De Voe Roosevelt, wife of the Democratic presidential nominee, was to be a guest at a Whitney tea party perturbed the Bacon camp. Mrs. Roosevelt is a Roosevelt by birth as well as marriage and while the Long Island Roosevelt can term her husband only a distant relative, they can't say that of her. Her father was a brother of "T. R.," who was of the Long Island clan.

Dallas Democratic Committee Will Support Bullington

EL PASO (UP)—El Paso county democratic nominees said they will support Mrs. Miriam A. (Ma) Ferguson for Texas governor and the entire democratic ticket.

Their statements were in reply to a letter from John D. Id, Dallas, state committee man, who asked if they intended to support Mrs. Ferguson.

"Though some said they believe there is better Democratic gubernatorial material than Mrs. Ferguson, they are pledged to party loyalty and must support Mrs. Ferguson."

Guadalupes To Be Visited By Geologists

West Texas Society Hears C. L. Mohr On Interesting Range

SAN ANGELO—Members of the West Texas Geological Society will make a field trip to the Guadalupe Mountains in extreme western Texas and in southeastern New Mexico on Nov. 11, 12 and 13. It was decided at the regular monthly meeting of the society here Tuesday night on the roof of the St. Angelus hotel. A committee composed of C. L. Mohr of San Angelo, M. B. Arick of McKinney and E. Russell Lloyd of Midland was appointed to make arrangements for the excursion.

The feature of the meeting was a review by Mr. Mohr, district geologist for the Indian Territory illuminating Oil Co. here, of various interpretations of the Guadalupe Mountain section. He said that the difficult problems of stratigraphy in the Trans-Pecos part of Texas and New Mexico appear to be explained as satisfactorily by assuming the existence of a number of unconformities as by considering the Capitan limestone and the upper part of the Delaware Mountain a fossil reef.

Oil Formation Exposed

The importance of the Guadalupe geologically is that exposed in them, particularly on the precipitous western side, are nearly all the formations that produce oil in southeastern New Mexico and in West Texas. A study of these formations, therefore, is essential to a knowledge of the subsurface geology of the Permian Basin.

The Guadalupe Mountains are a southern continuation of the Sacramento Mountains, lying some 10 miles in Eddy county, New Mexico, and extending about seven miles into Culberson county, Texas. The range is six to seven miles wide, sloping gradually to the Pecos River on the east but having as much as 4000 feet of relief within two miles on its western side. Rising 8500 feet, El Capitan Peak is the second highest in Texas its altitude being exceeded only by a mountain in the Big Bend. The mountains are difficult of access and many legends of buried treasure surround them. The steep slopes are barren, but the gentle slopes are covered by timber and brush.

The Capitan limestone in the Guadalupe mountains is the formation in which occurs the Carlsbad cavern about 25 miles to the east. That subterranean labyrinth was dissolved out of massive limestone by circulating underground water.

Mr. Mohr gave synopses of published reports that incline largely to the reef theory and explained the ideas of unconformities, as yet unpublished, of a number of geologists who have worked in the Guadalupe mountains recently. He expressed the opinion that further study of available evidence will contribute to a reconciliation of views. Mr. Mohr used maps and drew diagrams to illustrate the principles of the reef theory on the one hand and unconformities on the other.

The attendance was the largest at a geological meeting in several months. Out-of-town members present included Joseph E. Moore, district geologist for Shell Oil Co. at Midland; Ben Carney, district geologist for Humble Oil & Refining Co. at McKinney; M. B. Arick and Vernon Moore, also with the Humble Oil & Refining Co. at San Angelo; and E. D. Kluge, former district geologist for Empire State Oil Co. at Rocky Mountain and Pacific Northwest area states but who has been recently in route to Pennsylvania. He has just returned from the east.

Walter C. Mendell, of Washington director of the United States Geological Survey, likely will come to San Angelo this fall and would like to meet the geologists of this section at a dinner. It was announced by A. L. Ackers, president of the society. The information came from Sidney Powers at Tulsa to J. H. Hosterman, district geologist for Amerada Hess. Mr. Ackers also announced that the U. S. G. S. desires the names of companies that furnish it with information for the new geological map of Texas.

What Grade A Milk Means To User Outlined

State Health Department Representative Issues Statement

M. B. Arick, chief of the state health department, here Friday issued the following statement on the meaning of the term "Grade A Milk" in the milk business, when producing milk for the home market.

"The first step in the production of Grade A milk is the selection of the best cows and the best management of the herd. The cows should be healthy and free from disease. The milk should be produced in clean surroundings and handled in a clean manner. It should be cooled immediately after production and stored in a clean, cool place until it is ready for use.

"It means further that the milk has been produced, bottled, handled and labeled under the supervision of the city or state health authority and the United States Public Health Service. The same inspection applies to the milk if it is pasteurized. No milk that is pasteurized has the advantage of a fresh, unadulterated milk. The state health department is authorized to get this to the home consumer by the same route that the grade A milk is the state and highest quality milk. It is produced and handled in a clean manner and is a superior product. The highest quality milk is the grade A milk.
