Cull Out All Superficial Males and Unprofitable Hens.

Every Fowl That Does Not Appear Healthy and Vigorous Should Be Sent to Market-Feed Liberally During Cold Weather.

One of the very first things to do to secure a profit from the farm flock during the winter is to cull out the flock and sell every bird that does not show a promise of returning a profit.

Old hens, superfluous males and pullets that do not show good healthy development had better be sold for what they will bring. All birds that do not appear healthy and vigorous should be placed in a house by themselves and given a chance to become marketable. In this way the size of the flock can be reduced and only hens that are capable of paying for their feed and care kept through the

The flock must be fed liberally during the cold weather. Nothing is to be gained by feeding starvation rations. This much is an assured fact.

Poult v House With Concrete Founda ton-Chesp and Convenient

It is better to sell half the flock and give "e feed to the ones that are left. With feeds of all kinds at present prices, it requires strict economy and careful management to secure results during the winter months.

Wheat, corn and oats make an ideal grain ration for laying hens. It forms a palatable feed, furnishes variety and is well balanced for egg production. With boiled vegetables and meat scraps added or mixed with cut clover it makes a well-balanced feed.

The grain feeds can be improved by grinding and feeding in the form of a mash a part of the time. The change is highly beneficial and increases egg production. Meat scraps are a good source of protein. Green bone is preferred by many poultrymen, but it is out of the question with many poultry keepers on account of the amount of labor required in its

If one is situated near to a large market and can buy bone and meat at a low cost and has plenty of time to prepare it, he may then secure a good feed at a moderate cost. However, I believe that the average poultry keeper will find meat scraps at three dollars a hundred fully as cheap and economical a feed.

Hens must have bulky and succuient feed to take the place of the green grass they get during the summer. Alfalfa and red clover cut and cured early, are the best substitutes. If the hay is run through a cutting box or grinder and steamed for an hour and a half the hens will consume nearly all of it.

It is rich in protein and a good eggproducing food. If the flock has a dry and comfortable house, free from vermin, they will furnish an abundant supply of winter eggs, providing, of course, that other conditions are

GOLF FOOT IS LATEST ILL

Doctor Tries to Take Joy Out of Life by Discovering New Ailment Due to Popular Sport.

Somebody's always willing to dig and find out something about that which one likes most. For instance, there are those who discourage ice cream, beer, highballs, cocktails, etc. But up to the time of the current issue of the Medical Record there were few who discouraged any particular line of sport beyond, perhaps, mentioning that a person might overtrain. One needs a brand new breath to tell this.

After millions of men and women have advocated golf as the healthiest of exercises, despite the fact that it may encourage a bit of fibbing now and again, along comes a doctor and declares that he has discovered the golf foot. The whole sum and substance of "golfer's foot" is that in driving or making some shots properly, one may get too much weight on the toes of the left foot. Players of this class, says the doctor, are very likely to develop a large callus on the inner side of the great toe about opposite to the bed of the nail. The floors doctor recommends that the best of care be taken of one's feet.

Declare They Encountered 20-Foot Reptile in Pennsylvania Field-Shots Failed to Stop It.

Frank Johnson and John Breese iving at Somerton, Pa., are authority for the statement that a snake between fifteen and twenty feet long is at large in that vicinity. They declare it is evidently an anaconda.

The two men were walking across a field near the Forest Hill cemetery, and, according to their statement the snake glided from a pile of rocks. moved swiftly across an open field. and disappeared at the opening of an old sewer. Breese emptied the contents of a high-calibered revolver at the reptile, but the snake kept going. The men are unqualified in the assertion that the reptile was about twenty

Considering the length of the vovages they undertook and the size of the vessels, there is a remarkable number of old American whaleships still in service. #### UILDING ON INSIDE LOT

Home May Be Made as Comfortable as One Erected in More Ad-Vantageous Position.

When building on an inside lot a umber of complications, not found in corner house, will arise. The corner se has unobstructed views from the windows on two sides, while the se on the inside lot is likely to are but one. This fact necessitates areful planning in locating the livs room, front entrance and porch.

The location of the living room may erelop the question of a choice between a western exposure, which is estrable, or windows, which are a

Since from the standpoint of health, s well as of comfort, it is essential to secure the maximum of sun and air in preference to other consideraions, the living room should extend across the front of the house. High vindows, if neighboring houses are lear, may be placed at the sides to dimit air and light, and will exclude nattractive views.

With the living room extending eross the front of the house, the cor-tet location of the entrance becomes problem. A middle entrance is not irable, since it would make the living room a common thoroughfare or le necessitate a division in it.

A satisfactory solution is to place he entrance at one corner. By this rrangement the entrance hall may be o divided from the living room as to

LAWN REQUIRES MUCH CARE

Must Not Be Neglected If One Would Have a Really Suitable Adjunct to Home.

In order to keep our lawns beautiful, they must have constant care. Too often the lawn is cared for only during the growing season, when in reality it should be cared for during Whenever the lawn needs fertilizing, put on very fine, well-rotted manure soon after the ground becomes frozen in the fall. Let it lay on the lawn all winter, and rake it off in the spring as soon as active growth takes place. Be cure and use well-rotted manure, because fresh manure is apt to heat and kill the grass roots.

During an open winter, the grass is subject to a drying-out process which tends to kill the roots. This can be helped by sprinkling the lawn

Weeds, dandellons, etc., infest the lawn whenever the grass has become thin. These thin places can be remedied a great deal by sowing grass seed very early in the spring and raking it in well. Young grass will start growing very early, and in this way, it will get ahead of the weeds .- E. F. McKune, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins, Colorado.

There is and always has been a great amount of public spirit in Melbourne, due, in large part, to the Scotch element that has predominated from the beginning. "The first citizens, led by Scots, as r rule, set to work with magnificent faith in the future. A city was planned worthy of being the capital of ten million people, and the public buildings were designed on the same generous scale. The soil on the site was deep and rich; that suggested tree planting. and most of the streets are today relieved by handsome foliage and the parks which ring the city round have trees worthy of the forests of Europe. The avenue of elms in Fitzroy Gardens certainly represents that tree at its best."-Bishop E. E. Hoss in the Dal-

Recovering Radium.

What is known as "radium" is a radium salt, usually either radium bromide or radium chloride, sometimes radium sulphate. Tiny grains of these salts are extremely precious and are usualy sealed up in glass bulbs. The radium in one of the first bulbs that were received in London had a curious history. A physician in Portland place was applying the bulb to a patient when he accidentally let it fall and a moment after crushed It under his foot.

The value of the radium to the physician was very great. He removed his shoes and cut out a square of his valuable carpet. He had shoes and carpet burned, and out of the ashes refined the original radium salt. L was placed in a new applicator and is to use today.

While preparing a grain exhibit for eastern fairs in August, W. C. King, exhibit clerk for the state board of immigration, swallowed the beard of a stalk of macaroni wheat The beard stuck in his throat. He tried to cough it out.

Recently the beard, 11/4 inches long, was removed from his right cheek, the St. Paul Dispatch states. At the time of the accident Mr. King noticed no ill effects.

While at the Galesburg (Ill.) fair his chest became sore. Mr. King did not know what was the matter. Neither did a physician he called. But the pain grew less and he forgot about it.

At the Indiana state fair at Indianapolis later his throat became sore. For ten days he was bothered with a swelling. Another physician was called, but he failed to diagnose the case. The soreness of the throat was followed by an abscess in his right ear. Later, Mr. King was troubled with a swelling of the jaw.

Recently a lump formed in his right cheek. It was painful, and a hird physician was called. He, like the others, could not understand the symptoms. Then the beard of wheat was forced out of the lump.
