Economical Suggestions. There are so many rich and attractive dishes which we would like to afford; but the cost is in the way.

The rich steamed pudding which is in homes of moderate means because of its expense. The following is a recipe that is especially good and one quite inexpensive

Steamed Pudding.

Take one and a half cups of flour. two teaspoonfuls of baking powder stfted well, a cupful each of suet, brown sugar, raisins, currants or chopped prunes, grated carrot, grated potato, half a cup of orange peel, half a grated nutmeg, one lemon peel grated, half a teaspoon of cloves and a teaspoon of cinnamon. Steam three hours. This pudding can be re-heated and is good as long as it lasts. When oranges are reasonable in price, orange marmalade is not an extravagance as it is used only in small quantities as a delicacy, yet an econical rule for making a marmalade which will take its place acceptably is the following:

American Marmalade.

Shave very thin one orange, one grape fruit and one lemon. Peel and core two small greening apples. Meas ure the fruit and add three times the ount of water. lowest motive that can move the human soul. The outside of man is not of so much importance after all; the gentleman is a lover of men, and seeks not to charm but only to serve them.

Meat Sauces

There are a few common sauces which are well known, such as tomato. white sauce and the brown sauce. A sauce, if well-prepared and served, will change the character of a dish on which it is passed, and as the following are not so commonly served, they may prove acceptable.

Pickle Sauce Rub an ounce of butter (two tablespoonful of salt, a speck of cayenne and one tablespoon of finely chouned

Then quickly stir in the creamed butter and serve at once.

Bread Sauce.

Horse Radish Sauce. Take three tablespoonfuls of grated horse radish, one tablespoonful of vinegar, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cavenne and four tablespoonfuls of heavy cream beaten stiff. Serve Household Hints.

Milk besides being a food is a most useful liquid in the household. It will take out ink spots of long standing. A little put into cooked starch gives it a gloss.

It will remove discoloration from gilt mirrors and picture frames.

Used with bluing for lace curtains it will make them look as fresh as When washing fine laces instead of using starch to stiffen them, a little milk will answer the purpose and make them creamy in color if so desired.

When there are several pieces of cheese too dry to serve, try toasting them. It changes the flavor and makes a dainty way to serve cheese.

A little grated cheese added to escalloged potatoes adds flavor and changes an otherwise common dish into a new one.

The Uses of Cheese. Cheese is such a concentrated food that a little of it is valuable in the bill of fare. There should never be a crumb of cheese wasted as there are so many dishes that are improved by a tablespoonful of grated cheese Served as it commonly is in cubes or sices as an accompaniment to the dessert or as dessert itself with crackers it needs no recommendation. Cheese alone or in combination makes a fine filling for sandwiches. Take equal parts of the grated cheese and walnuts pounded to a meal, moisten with thick cream and season to taste with salt. Spread between thin slices of buttered bread. A fittle grated cheese added to a white sauce which may be served with eggs or toast is a nice breakfast or luncheon dish.

A plain omelet served with grated cheese sprinkled over it just before folding, changes the omelet into .. fancy dish.

Tomatoes and Rice.

Prepare tomatoes for stewing and add when boiling two tablespoonfuls of rice to a cup of tomato. . Cover and cook slowly, then season with salt, pepper and a little butter and sugar. Rice with cheese makes a very acceptable escalloped dish. Rice croquettes may be served with any preferred sauce.

Small cakes baked rather thin and frosted are now the popular cake. A variety of frostings may be used, a filling may be laid on top of the small cakes and carefully covered with a boiled frosting.

Practical Fashions

We illustrate herewith one of the simpler designs of the short jacket. The fitting of both front and back is accomplished by means of long seams which extend from the shoulders all the way to the hem. This arrangement leaves an unbroken panel in the back and a similar one in the front, broken, however, by the line of the closing. which is in the center. The outline of the neck is trimmed with a narrow turnover collar, in shawl style, which ends at the top of the closing, just about at the bust. Plain sleeves complete the jacket and there are small slash pockets at the sides. Serge, cheviot, check or striped materials are suitable for this coat.

ORNAMENTAL FROCK

This dressy looking little frock is really quite simple when it comes to the making of it, for the ornamental feature is the large bertha, collar and panel, and this can be omitted if preferred, or it can be made separately and fastened on with little gilt baby pins. The under portion of the dress consists of a yoke waist, with the material full around the edges and gath ered into the belt as well. The skirt is plainly gathered, except just in front, where the panel idea of the waist is continued. This dress will be dainty in any white material and the bertha may be made of all over embroidery or somewhat in the manner shown. The style is just as good for colored ginghams and the bertha of these may be edged with Hamburg. The pattern (4931) is cut in sizes

HAT woman isn't tired of being bossed around by some one over her in business affairs?

I am not talking about women in general, but the women who are bread winners. To boss or be bossed in private life is something to be settled in friendly compact or by the divorce courts. But there is an increasing army of women toilers who must either work up into a position of independence or settle down to be dumb driven cattle, and then some. What the business woman needs today is a firm determination to have a little business all her own. Why should she be content to be bossed about year in and year out? There must be some one thing she can learn to do well conugh to be a master. If she is now working in a dressmaking shop there is no reason in the world why she should not set up a little shop of her own as soon as she is sure she knows the game thoroughly. The other women had pluck enough to do this.

Why shouldn't she? Fear of failure is the bane of the woman wage earner. She has ability, is faithful and energetic. But she is fearful. And fear spells long hours of toil to build up another's reputation instead of her own. Cast fear to the winds and start out for yourself.

Even though she does not branch out for herself, the woman who is working for a living has it in her power to become a law unto herself. She can do this by making herself competent for the position she is filling. She must become an authority, a living encyclopedia, if necessary, of the subject matter before her. The boss doesn't want to trouble himself over means, if the results are all right. There are no questions asked if the returns foot up all right at night.

Overconfidence is rash in any line of work. Incompetent people often get things badly tangled up because they go ahead when they should follow instructions implicitly. But I would have every woman taste the joys of competency. And competency comes from knowledge and practice. The woman who scrubs floors thoroughly is a treasure today who need never be out of work. The stenographer who can leave gum chewing alone long enough to master pronunciation and the old-fashioned art of spelling correctly will always keep an employer, and the girl who can keep her pompadour in order and still sell goods to the patient woman in waiting will not have to be chasing up employment agencies.

Just be competent. That is the secret of success in business. No one can complain if you have done your work well. No one can nag you if your tasks are done on time. No one can browbeat you if you look your work squarely in the face and do it honestly.

Above all, watch for a chance to become your own boss. Taste the sweets of fitting your own latch key into the front door of your own place of business every morning. You can own a shop all your own if you work out your own salvation.

Cities of Europe Are Best Governed

By Thomas F. Anderson

The cities of Europe are better governed than ours, for the very good reason that their representative citizens in all walks of life-merchants, bankers, shipowners, financiers and educators-have a keener sense of their civic duties than the so-called better classes in American communities usually betray.

In other words, the influential and substantial citizens of European cities are more willing to give their time, thought and in many instances their money, to the public service, than are ours; and the result is that while they ofttimes have to make real sacrifices of comfort, convenience and peace of mind in thus discharging their civic obligations, they have the immense satisfaction of knowing that administrative scandal and corruption are practically un-

You will sometimes find in large European cities unkempt streets, poor traffic arrangements and other indications of municipal carelessness or inefficiency, but rarely will you discover any evidence or hear any whisper of that familiar condition of things known in our American cities by that elastic and greatly overworked word, "graft."

We Americans pride ourselves on our national tendency to hustle and engage in the strenuous life, but the busiest man I ever met was not an American at all, but an Englishman, who, in addition to bearing the responsibilities of his own private business, was at that time serving both as lord mayor of his city and as chairman of the great local dock and harbor board. When I called on him he showed me his list of official and social engagements for that week, and it appeared to be almost as long as the membership list of the new Boston Merchants' association.

The corresponding type of citizen in the United States really means to do the right thing by his community, but he balks when it comes to the supreme test of his public spirit-the willingness to take up the burden himself instead of delegating it to some one else, for whose election he is quite willing to contribute his money and influence. This, together with the more stringent electoral requirements that prevail in many foreign communities is the whole secret of the success of municipal government abroad and its comparative failure

If Man Were to Drop From Great Height

By M. T. IRONS

If one were to descend in an aeroplane from a height of 10,000 feet on the same spiral on which he went up he would land where he started.

It is impossible to tell how high the atmosphere reaches.

Its height has been calculated to be from 40 to 100 miles above the earth's crust and every particle of it is attracted by gravitation downward toward the center of the earth.

In other words, the atmosphere travels with the earth at the same rate that the earth's surface travels

If that were not the case the rotation of the earth would afford us a splendid medium for transportation, as we could travel around the globe by going straight up in the air and remaining there for that length of time.

This would smash all transportation records.

Stephen Henry Raised 139.8 Bushels of Corn on 95 Per cent. of an Acre at Cost of Only 13.5 Cents Per Bushel.

Master Stephen G. Henry of Melose, La., has been awarded the title of "Champion corn grower of the world." Stephen is sixteen years of age and joined the boys' corn club of his parish when it was organized three years ago. He began making a good record during the first year of his membership in the corn clubs. He has been a winner of premiums from the start, and in 1911 he won sweepstakes at the Louisiana state fair. He won a gold watch offered by Gov. Plant the best seed that money can buy.

Do not plant the seed too deep When planted too deep there is hardly strength enough in the little plant to reach the air and it often dies before it can draw support from the soil.

"ECZEMA ITCHED SO I COULDN'T STAND IT."

"I suffered with eczema on my neck for about six months, beginning by little pimples breaking out, I kept scratching till the blood came. It kept getting worse, I couldn't sleep nights any more. It kept itching for about a month, then I went to a doctor and got some liquid to take. It seemed as if I was going to get better. The itching stopped for about three days, but when it started again was even worse than before. The eczema itched so badly I couldn't stand it any more. I went to a doctor and he gave me some medicine, but it didn't do any good. We have been having Cuticura Remedies in the house, so I decided to try them. I had been using Cuticura Soap, so I got me a box of Cuticura Ointment. and washed off the affected part with Cuticura Soap three times a day, and then put the Cuticura Ointment on. The first day I put it on, it relieved me of itching so I could sleep all that night. It took about a week, then I could see the scab come off. I kept the treatment up for three weeks, and my eczema was cured.

"My brother got his face burned with gunpowder, and he used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The people all thought he would have scars, but you can't see that he ever had his face burned. It was simply awful to look at before the Cuticura Remedles (Soap and Ointment) cured it." (Signed) Miss Elizabeth Gehrki, Forrest City, Ark., Oct. 16, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a liberal sample of each, with 32-page booklet on the care and treatment of skin and hair, will be sent, postfree, on application to Potter D. & C. Corp., Dept. X, Boston.

Poor Tom.

A very youthful and entirely unknown musical composer read some verses by the renowned Thomas Moore which he liked very much. Forthwith the buzz of inspiration circulated through his brain, and the next thing he knew he had evolved a tune which went right prettily with the words of the Irish poet. Much elated, the very youthful composer took the product to a publisher of popular songs and sang it to him. The publisher shook hill head.

"The music's all right," he opined, "but the words are bum."

Willing to Make an Effort. On a large estate in the Scottish highlands it was the custom for a piper to play in front of the house every weekday morning to awaken the residents. After an overco fal Saturday night, however, the piper forgot the day and began his reveille (can it be played on the pipes?) on Sunday morning. The angry master shouted to him from the bedroom win-

"that you never liked Hunter, though I never could see why you should dislike him; and it didn't take two minutes to see that this man Cayley, with his wings and his romance, had fascinated you. But in spite of that, I thought you had a better sense of justice than you showed just now."

She flushed a little. "My sense of justice seems to be better than yours this morning, Tom," she answered quietly. Then she unslung her binoculars again and, turning her back upon him, gazed out shoreward.

"I am getting worried about our shore party," she remarked, as if by way of discontinuing the quarrel. "If there, in hiding from us, willing to do unprovoked murder, when they can with impunity-"

"So you believed that part of the story, too, did you?" Tom interrupted. She did not answer his question at all, but turned her attention shoreward again.

A moment later she closed her binoculars with a snap, and walked around to the other side of the deck, where Mr. Fanshaw, leaning his elbows on the rail, was looking out across the ice-floe.

"Well," he asked briskly, as she came up and laid an affectionate arm across his shoulder, "I suppose you've been telling Tom why you did ft-why you made Cayley throw that dart away, I mean; but you'll have to tell me, too. I can't figure it out. You had something in mind, I'm sure." "I haven't been telling Tom," she "He doesn't seem in a very reasonable mood this morning. But I did have something in mind. I was proving that Mr. Cayley couldn't possibly be the man who had committed the murder."

"I suspected it was that," he said. "It's the stick that proves it really," she said. "You remember how puzzled you were because the end of it which you held it by wouldn't fit your hand? I discovered why that was when you sent me in to get it a short while ago. It's a left handed stick. It fits the palm of your left hand perfectly. You'll find that that is so when you try it. And Mr. Cayley is right-handed."

The old man nodded rather dubiously. "Cayley may be ambidextrous, for anything you know," he objected.

She had her rejoinder ready: "But this stick. Uncle Jerry, dear, was are still determined on that | made for a man who couldn't throw of yours, are you, to aban- with his right hand, and Mr. Cayley can. He did it perfectly easily, and

"Oh, I don't know," the old gentleman answered. "Take it by and large, I should say that Cayley was playing in luck."

> CHAPTER VI. Tom's Confession,

At intervals during the day those enigmatical words of Mr. Fanshaw's recurred to the girl with the reflection that they wanted serious thinking over, at the first convenient opportunity. But the day wore away and the opportunity did not appear.

The captain of the yacht-his name was Warner-was on shore in command of the searching party, but the first officer, Mr. Scales, remained on ly badly-really badly?" board. He was in possession of all the data, though they had not told him the story of Philip Cayley's old relation with the murdered man.

"It stands to reason," he said, "that the only party of white men that could be here would be the survivors of the Fielding expedition. We know from the news that young Mr. Fanshaw brought aboard that there is one such survivor here. If there were any considerable number of them left, able-bodied enough to walk across the glacier, we could be sure they'd be here on the shore waiting for us. We back on deck. Won't you-won't you could be certain they would have made some attempt to signal us as soon as they sighted us.

"If they weren't white men but Indians-Chucotes-they'd have been quite as glad as white men to get a chance to go back with us as far as St. Michaels. And in the third place, if they were not Chucotes, but some strange, unknown, murderous band of aborigines, there wouldn't have been even one survivor of the Fielding ex-

"Of course that's not an absolute water-tight line of reasoning, but it seems to me there is a tremendous probability that it's right, and that this flying man has lost his wits."

By four o'clock they had decided that, whether or not the sky-man's For the first time that she could re- story might be true, it was high time member, he was regarding her with to send a relief party ashore to find

The evening was unusually mild, the thermometer showing only a degree or two below freezing, and here in the lee of the deckhoung they hardly needed their furs.

They had sat there in silence a long while. Tom's promise that they would keep a brisk lookout against a posthere are ten or twelve men living sible attack on the yacht, had passed utterly from both their minds. It was sc still-so dead still; the world about them was so utterly empty as to make any thought of such an attack seem preposterous. Finally the girl seemed to rouse herself from the train of thought that had preoccupied her mind straighteninto her companion's face. But this little movement of her body failed to rouse him. His eyes did not turn to meet hers, but remained fixed on the far horizon. A moment later she stretched out hand and explored for his beneath the great white bear skin that covered him, found it and interlocked her fingers with his. At that, he pulled himself up, with a start, and abruptly withdrew his own from the contact. She colored a little, and her brows knitted in perplexity. "What an old bear you are, Tom," she said. "What's the matter today? It's not a bit like you to sulk just because we disagree about something. We disagree all the time, but you've never been like this to me before."

"I always told you I was a sullen brute when things went wrong with me, although you never would believe it," he said. "I'm sorry."

"I don't want you to be sorry," she told him; "I just want you to be a few shades more cheerful." He seemed not to be able to give her what she wished, however, for he lapsed again into his moody abstraction. But after a few minutes more of silence, he turned upon her with a question that astonished her. "What did you do that for, just now?"

At first she was in doubt as to what act of hers, he referred to. "Do you mean my hand?" she asked, after looking at him in puzzled curiosity for a moment.

He nodded.

He leaned back moodily into his chair without answering her.

After a little perplexed silence, she spoke again. "I didn't know things were going wrong with you. I didn't even suspect it until this morning. when Uncle Jerry said-"

"What!" Tom interrupted. "What does the governor know about it? What did he say?"

"Why, nothing, but that you were playing in rather hard luck, he thought, and that I was to be nice to you. Is the world going badly- real-

"Yes." That curt monosyllable was evidently all the answer he meant to make. At that she gave up all attempt to console him, dropped back in her chair and cuddled a little deeper down under her bear skin, her face, three-quarters away from him, turned toward that part of the sky that was already becoming glorious with the tints of sunset.

"You've never had any doubt at all, have you, that I really deserved the job of being your big brother; that I was that quite as genuinely as if I had been born that way?"

"No," she said; "of course not, Tom, dear. What put such an idea into your head?"

He paled a little, and it was a minute or two before he could command the words he wanted, to his lips. "Because of my hopes, I suppose," he said unsteadily; "because I had hoped, absurdly enough, for the other answer. You asked as a joke a while back if I meant to disown you. Well, I do, from that relationship-because, I'm not fit for the job; because-because-I've come to love you in the other way."

She looked at him in perfectly blank astonishment. He would not meet her eyes, his own, their pupils almost parallel, gazed out, unseeing, beyond

Finally he said: "Jeanne, if you do love me as much as thatthe way you do, not the way I love you, but love me any way-could you -could you-marry me just the same? I'd never have any thought in the world but of making you happy. And ed up a little and turned for a look I'd always be there; you could count on me, you know."

"Don't!" she interrupted curtly. "Don't talk like that, Tom." She shivered, and drew away from him with a little movement somewhere near ekin to disgust. He winced at it, and reddened. Then, in a voice that sounded curiously thick to her, curiously unlike his own, he asked a question: "If I had told you all this a month ago-told you how I felt toward you, and asked you, loving me the way you do, to marry me just the same, would you?-Oh. I suppose you would have refused. But would you have shuddered and shrunk away from me-like that?"

"Did I shudder and shrink away?" she asked. "I didn't know it. I wasn't angry; I'm not now. Butbut that was a terrible thing you asked of me.' "Would it have struck you as horrible," he persisted, "if I had asked it a month ago?" "Perhaps not," she answered thoughtfully. "I've changed a good deal in the last month-since we sailed away from San Francisco and left the world behind us-our world -and came out into this great white empty one. I don't know why that is."

"I know." He was speaking with a sort of brutal intensity that startled dropped into it, cast off the painter, her. "I know. He held himself rigidly until till she had disappeared round the end of the rowed steadily, without so much as deckhouse. Then he bent over and buried his face in his hands!

What the thing was that roused him to his present surroundings he never knew. He was conscious of no sound, but suddenly he sat erect and stared about him in amazement. It had grown to be seen. A bank of fog had come quite dark. It must be two or three rolling in from the eastward, so hours since Jeanne had left the chair was going to take a little walk.

He spoke her name, not loudly at first, for he thought she must be close by. But the infinite silent spaces round from her seat in the row boat, seemed to absorb the sound of his voice. There was no sign that any sentient thing, except his very self, ice and sand which surrounded them. had heard the words he uttered. Then he called louder.

He closed the door behind him. Then he limped slowly down the corridor toward the foot of the companionway. The heavy tread was already descending the stairs.

He turned the corner, stopped short and gasped. And that was all. There was no time even for a cry. He had caught one glimpse of a monstrous figure clad in skins, huge in bulk. hairy-faced like a gorilla.

And then, the man or beast had, with beastlike quickness, lifted his arm and struck. And Tom Fanshaw dropped down at his feet, senseless.

CHAPTER VII.

The Rosewood Box.

On the girl, Tom Fanshaw's passionate, stormy avowal had the effect of sort of moral earthquake. It left the ground beneath her feet suddenly unstable and treacherous; it threatened to bring down about her ears the whole structure of her life. The very thing she had relied upon for shelter and security against outside troubles and dangers, was, on the instant, fraught with a greater danger than any of them.

For the first few moments after his avowal she had felt no emotion other than that of astonishment and incredulity. Even when he asked her if she could not marry him, anyway, though the question revolted her, she told the truth in saying that she was not angry. The anger came later, but it burned into a flame that was all the hotter for its tardiness in kindling. It must have an outlet somewhere, and as such, the promenade up and down the other side of the deck was altogether insufficient. The sight of a small boat at the foot of the accommodation ladder seemed to offer something better. So, pulling on a pair of fur gauntlets, she tained, and rowed away without any thought of her destination-of any both on and fasten the chain to the a very clear idea of what she was do right without getting loose. It was half a mile, perhaps, from the yacht to the particular bit of shelving beach toward which she unconsciously propelled the boat. She a glance over her shoulder, until she felt the grate of the shingle beneath the bow.

She became aware, not only that she had unconsciously come ashore, but also that the yacht was nowhere heavy as to render an object 100 beside him and announced that she paces away totally invisible. The clump of empty buildings here on the beach could hardly be half that distance, as she remembered, yet looking she could make out no more than their blurred masses against the white

She had taken a step toward it in deed, before she saw, through the murk and candle smoke, the thing that lay right before her eyes-a rather large, brass-bound rosewood box or chest. It had not been here in the afternoon when they had entered the place, for they had searched its bare interior thoroughly in the hope that there might be something which previous investigators had overlooked. This box, six inches high and a foot long. or more, could not have been here then. It was standing now in the most conspicuous place in the room-in the very middle of the bunk.
