

W. Turner Shot and Killed Near Wilson

Last Friday afternoon word received in Tahoka that B. W. Turner, a farmer residing near Wilson in the north part of the county, had met his death when shot wounds in the hands of his wife. Officers went at once to the scene of the murder and found the dead man in a pasture several hundred yards from the house. It seems that Mr. Turner attempted to reach a neighbor's house after receiving the news.

Mrs. Turner and a daughter-in-law, Mrs. Estes Turner, together with deceased had just returned from Amarillo. From information received it seems that the women arrived home ahead of Mr. Turner, who upon reaching the residence, found it to be deserted whereupon he proceeded to force his way inside. It was then that a scuffle occurred and a fatal shot fired that caused the death. Mrs. Turner claims that in the scuffle over the gun it was accidentally discharged.

The body of Mr. Turner was brought to Tahoka and interred in the local cemetery. Immediately after the burial, warrants were issued for the arrest of the men women and at once returned to jail Mrs. Estes Turner, the daughter-in-law, was allowed bond in the sum of $2,000. She was hurriedly made bonds Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Turner, the wife, is still confined in jail, but efforts are being made to obtain her release under $2,000 bond, which is being made by relatives in the east.

The affair is a most regrettable and is deplored by the citizens of our county.

This is the third killing occurring in Lynn County since its organization in 1903.

The following from an Amarillo newspaper will be of interest to our readers:

Leslie White Dies

The death angel again passed over Lynn county Thursday morning and claimed for his own Leslie White, age twelve years and eleven months.

Leslie had suffered intensely for about a week with autointoxication. Everything that medical skill could do was done but nothing seemed to give but little relief. Leslie was a pupil of our public schools until the present term, having moved on the farm southeast of town with his mother, Mrs. R. W. Lewis.

Interment was made in Tahoka cemetery today. The News joins the many friends of the family in offering our feeble words of sympathy in this sad hour.

Lynn County Has Many Grain Crops

Sorghums, Maizes, and Grasses Form Bulk of its Exhibit Here

From The Dallas News:

A county of grain, sorghums and maize is Lynn County, situated just south of Lubbock County in the Panhandle. The exhibit put on by this county at the State Fair of Texas in the Agriculture Building includes these products as the chief commercial production of the section. Samples of early cotton, white and fluffy, lie side by side with the green and unopened bolls. Boll worms have not injured the specimens of cotton bolls on exhibit, and if the promises of all bolls is as good, the cotton crop will be extraordinary in that section this year.

Excellent crops in the grains, sorghums, maizes and grasses have been obtained in Lynn County this year, according to W. J. Crouch, in charge of the booth. The cotton crop is so heavy that extra labor will have to be imported to pick it, Mr. Crouch said. Farm labor for all purposes is scarce and hard to keep in that county, and the farmers are helping each other out as much as possible in the harvesting of grains, which must be done quickly. Mutual aid societies may be formed temporarily in the cotton picking times Mr. Crouch said.

MANY VEGETABLES SHOWN

The exhibit of Lynn County includes a multitude of vegetables grown without much effort and cultivated by practically every home owner in the county. The specimens on exhibit are typical of the products grown throughout the country. Turnips, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, peppers, squash, onions, beets, watermelons, pumpkin, kershaw, cantelopes, casaba, peanuts, beans, peas, popcorn, Sudan grasses, Colorado grass, alfalfa, butter beans and ten varieties of native grasses complete the exhibit.

One of the features of the plants shown is the Mexican fire weed, which grows wild in that county. It is an ornamental plant resembling an evergreen in foliage. The branches are small and grow closely together. The needle-like leaves are green as they grow from the trunk of the small bush, and at the tip they turn to a bright crimson. No flower is borne by the plant, and the leaves at the top give the color from which it gets its name. This is the only ornamental plant in the exhibit.

COUNTY GROWING FAST

This county, sending one of the largest exhibits to the State Fair has broken the record of any county in the United States in per cent of increase in population during the last twenty years, according to census figures recently issued.

Twenty years ago the county had only seventeen residents. Its population as given in the recent census is over 47,000.

The growth of the country's industry has kept pace with its population. New methods have replaced the old one-horse methods. Grain is grown on a large scale, and the county furnishes a large per cent of the hay and feedstuffs of the State. Syrup is made locally from the sorghum, but little is sold outside the county. Mr. Crouch made about 1,100 gallons last fall for his private use and for sale in towns near by. He believes that in time this will become one of the chief occupations of the county, and that much syrup of fine quality will be furnished the State from the canes grown there.

The Fight is Being Won

The backbone of the South has stiffened and the holders and owners of cotton are resolved to get a fair price for their commodity. The whole South is aroused. Meetings are being held; speeches are being made; advertisements and circulars are appearing; and the whole country is making a concerted effort to save the prosperity of the South by seeing that cotton brings its real value. While the Federal Reserve Bank has always been willing to help the farmer and business man in holding his cotton, the situation was more than clarified this week when the Governor of the Atlanta Bank made a positive statement, that the Federal Reserve Banks would do all they could to help the farmers hold their cotton.

30c COTTON OR MORE—IN 30 DAYS—40c LATER

You control the situation. Whether you get 30c or more for your cotton in 30 days depends on you. Cotton will bring this price in this time if you keep your cotton off the market or sell it piece-meal. (Remember that the inherent value of cotton is 40c or more—price recommended by the American Cotton Association for November) The reason is that many Sept.—Oct. shipments were transferred in to October because of the belief that October would bring cheaper cotton. There are an enormous number of contracts and commitments which come due this December, and these obligations have got to be filled. The spinners have got to have the cotton. Exporters and buyers and spinners and manufacturers have all made contracts which they have got to fulfill. But the farmer is the man who actually holds the cotton and if he will continue to hold it, those who hold contracts must pay him his price. You control the situation absolutely.

CLOSE UP SHOP—QUIT SELLING

To get your price, refuse to sell. Buyers need the cotton and they have got to get it from you. Pay no attention to market fluctuations and bear propaganda. Realize that this is the sixth consecutive short cotton crop the world has seen. There is little chance for a top crop this year. The crop is very late in some sections. Early frosts and abandonment of crops will unquestionably reduce the inditated yield further; certainly snaps, bollies and low grade cotton will not be gathered this year. Therefore, we seriously question whether there will even be an 11,000,000 bale crop gathered; it may be as little as 10,000,000 bales. An authority estimates the American mill consumption of America cotton this season, 6,350,000 bales, and consumption of foreign mills of American cotton, 6,350,000 bales,—a total consumption of American cotton this season of 12,700,000 bales (Government indicated yield 12,023,000). We call attention to the fact that the "carry over" from last season was 1,000,000 bales less than the previous season, and don't forget that possibly half of this "carry over" is "junk"—unspinnable cotton. Don't let the buyers and those interested in getting things cheap scare you out. Hold your cotton. Make them pay your price.

COMPENSATION BILL APPROVED BY A. L.

RESOLUTIONS SILENT AS TO LEGION'S POSITION ON ORGANIZED LABOR

PROPER TRAINING IS URGED

Purpose is Not to Develop Soldiers, But to Increase Number of True Americans.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The second annual convention of the American Legion in session here underwent a barrage of resolutions and committee reports.

The stand of the legion in regard to organized labor was not mentioned in the report of the committee on resolutions. A minority report was submitted which recommended that "the American Legion reiterate its well-known position, that it has no participation in controversies between capital and labor. The American Legion is not opposed to organized labor when it conducts itself, as we believe it normally does, in conformity with law and order."

Heated discussion followed and a substitute for the minority report was presented by California and adopted, stating "that this convention endorses the statement recently issued by the national commander, Franklin D'Olier, and accepts that statement as the legion's interpretation of its position in relation to organized labor."

The report of the committee on adjusted compensation recommended that the American Legion give its unqualified approval of—

1. Adjusted service pay, based on length of service; or,
2. Adjusted service certificate maturing in twenty years, based on length of service; or,
3. Vocational training; or,
4. Farm or home aid; or,
5. Land settlement, for which thirty-one states have already made, through their state legislature, provisions for co-operation.

The report also approved the action of the national executive committee and the national beneficial legislative committee in formulating and presenting this adjusted compensation legislation to congress, and directed the national committee to take such action as it may deem necessary to insure prompt passage of the bill.

AMERICA CONSIDERS EUROPE A BAD RISK

Unofficial Representative at Brussels Presents Views of U. S.

Brussels.—Roland W. Boyden, unofficial representative of the United States in the international financial convention in progress, took the floor at the conference at the request of several delegates and explained why Europe could not, under present conditions, be considered by the United States as a good business risk.

Mr. Boyden referred the delegates to the letter of former secretary of the treasury Carter Glass to Homer L. Ferguson, president of the chamber of commerce of the United States in which Mr. Glass declared, in effect, that the United States could not undertake to finance further the requirements of Europe. The letter, Mr. Boyden said, represented the attitude of President Wilson.

Started expressions were seen on the faces of some of the delegates as Mr. Boyden made it clear that no further government help should be expected from the United States. He said it was not easy for the United States to participate in the conference, because it was difficult for the administration to make known its attitude on the questions involved in the midst of a presidential campaign.

"I have been particularly cautioned with respect to expressions of opinion, and I want it to be understood I am giving my own personal views without in any sense representing my government," asserted Mr. Boyden.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 10

BAPTISM AND TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 3:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—Matt. 3:17.
ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Luke 3:1-14; Heb. 2:18, 4:15.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Pleasing the Heavenly Father.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Baptism and Temptation of Jesus.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Overcoming Temptation.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Victory Over Appetite, Pride and Ambition.

I. The Baptism of Jesus (3:1-17).

While the forerunner was discharging his office, the King emerged from his seclusion at Nazareth and demanded baptism at John's hands. The incongruity of this with the purpose of baptism brought from John a protest, but Jesus' explanation was satisfactory, so John baptized him. Touching Christ's baptism, note:

1. Its significance. (1) Negatively. (a) It did not mean his own obedience to the commandment of God, because his entire life had been lived entirely within the will of God. Not a moment in his entire life but what was lived entirely in accordance with the Father's will. (b) Not because he had sin, for he was absolutely sinless, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. This separation was so complete that even the devil could find no occasion against him (John 14:30). (2) Positively. Its significance is found in harmony with the central purpose of his coming into the world, which was to secure for his people salvation through death, burial and resurrection.
2. Approval from the opened heavens (vv. 16, 17). Immediately following his consecration to his work, the heavens were opened and the Spirit came and abode upon him, followed by words of approval from the Father. These all were essential for the work upon which Christ now entered—revelation (heavens opened), inspiration (dove abode upon him), and approval (words from the Father).

II. The Temptation of Jesus (4:1-11).

This temptation was the opening battle of the dreadful conflict between Christ and Satan. In this struggle, note:

1. The combatants. (1) Jesus Christ, the Divine Man, now entering upon his mediatorial work. He went immediately from the place of anointing and heavenly recognition as the Son of God to meet the arch-enemy of the race. (2) The devil. He was a real person filled with cunning and malice.
2. The battle ground—the Wilderness of Judea. The first man was tempted in a garden with the most pleasant surroundings and failed; the second man was tempted in a bare wilderness and gloriously triumphed.
3. The method of attack. Since as our Redeemer Christ sustains a three-fold relationship, Son of Man, Son of God and as Messiah, each one was made a ground of attack. (1) As Son of Man. This was a test of the reality of his humanity to demonstrate as to whether the humanity which he obtained through the Virgin birth was real. The appeal was made to the instinct of hunger. Hunger is natural and sinless. Having been forty days and nights without food, as a normal man, Christ had a craving appetite. While the appetite was not sinful, to have satisfied it in a wrong way would have been sin. (2) Son of God. It was to test as to whether this personality which had taken upon itself humanity, was divine. The devil quoted from a Messianic Psalm to get him to presume upon God's care. God does care for his own, but to neglect common precaution—to do the uncalled for thing just to put God's promise to a test is to sin and fail. (3) As Messiah. Christ's mission as Messiah was to recover this world from the devil. Now the devil offers to surrender to him on the simple condition that he adopt his method, thus obviating the necessity of the cross. The kingdoms were really Christ's, and he knew that they would ultimately become his. The inducement was to get immediate possession without the sufferings of the cross.
4. The defense—the Word of God. Christ met the enemy each time and repulsed him with "It is written." Each time he quoted from Deuteronomy, the book which the higher critics would discredit as reliable.
5. The issue—the enemy is completely routed.

Guided by Religion.

A nation that is guided by its religion, that is firm in its ancient faith, that looks beyond material exactitudes, may well hope to survive. After Thorough Trial a Detroit Mich., Man Endorses PE-RU-NA

The following letter written from Detroit, Michigan is no snap judgment expressed on the merits of PE-RU-NA, the well-known cathartic remedy, but rather a mature, sober opinion formed after a full year's trial.

This is the way Mr. Michael Fako of 608 East Palmer Avenue, in the Michigan Metro, in the Michigan Metro, writes: "After using PE-RU-NA for about one year I say I have found it a very good medicine for catarrh. It has helped me a great deal and I am very well satisfied. I have gained in weight, eat and sleep well, my bowels are regular and better color in my face."

and to me it is worth gold. I shall continue to use PE-RU-NA to my friends troubled with catarrh. Nothing so convincing as a cure of a user. I have seen people in my community who have been cured of catarrh, colds, coughs, croup, and bowel disorders in a very short time. Put up in both tablet and form. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

The Pupil's Point of View on the Better Schools Amendment

The teacher said to the waiting class, "Set forth why the amendments should pass."

So little Johnny removed his coat, and this is the poem that he wrote:

"The day is hot, and so am I To think that any tight-wad guy Would try to save a bean or two On better schools for me and you.

Colds & Headache

"For years we have used Black-Draught in our family, and I have never found any medicine that could take its place," writes Mr. H. A. Stacy, of Bradyville, Tenn. Mr. Stacy, who is a Rutherford County farmer, recommends Black-Draught as a medicine that should be kept in every household for use in the prompt treatment of many little ills to prevent them from developing into serious troubles.

THEDFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT

"It touches the liver and does the work," Mr. Stacy declared. "It is one of the best medicines I ever saw for a cold and headache. I don't know what we would do in our family if it wasn't for Black-Draught. It has saved us many dollars . . . I don't see how any family can hardly go without it. I know it is a reliable and splendid medicine to keep in the house. I recommend Black-Draught highly and am never without it."

SIX MONTHS I COULD NOT WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Me Strong and Able to Work—I Recommend It To All My Friends.

Bayonne, N. J.—"I had pains in back and legs so that I could not stand caused by female trouble. I felt so tired all the time, had bad headaches, and for six months I could not work. I was treated by a physician and took other remedies but got no relief. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me very much. I am well and strong and now able to do my work. I cannot thank you enough and I recommend your medicine to my friends who are sick."—Mrs. SUSIE SACATANSKY, 25 East 17th St., Bayonne, N. J.

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for over forty years, and today hold a record for such wonderful success as does Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and termed both standard and dependable by every thinking person.

Red Cross Care of Disabled Soldiers

TEACHING THE BLIND

WHAT the American Red Cross does for the comfort of disabled World War veterans in the United States public health service hospitals resembles in many ways the daily care of a mother for her children. It is friendly and it goes far beyond recreation and entertainment.

For there is no time "when a feller needs a friend" it is the period when a disabled soldier is trying to find himself after his world has been turned upside down. No matter how self-sufficient and self-reliant the veteran has been before he went through "Sherman's" he needs help then—in fact the more he relied on himself the more he is apt to need services. And it is often the case that the veteran needs help quite as much to protect him from himself as from the world in general. For many of these fine fellows are not themselves. It must be remembered, and will not be themselves for many a day.

And many of them are without ties of any kind—literally without kin and available friends. So the service these disabled veterans receive from the "Greatest Mother" is literally without money and without price.

Red Cross workers in the hospitals are in personal touch with each man from the time he enters the receiving ward until he is discharged. Why? There are troubles to be straightened out in connection with the compensation money the government owes him for his disability; reading matter, writing material and other incidentals to be supplied; checks to be cashed, and letters to be written to the people back home. Whatever the service—buying a toothbrush or untangling a love affair—the patients find Red Cross workers ready to help. The work is not spectacular, yet it is essential to their welfare and content.

The United States public health service was given the responsibility of providing hospital and sanatorium treatment for the sick and disabled discharged soldiers, sailors and marines a year ago last March. By a recent ruling of congress additional provision has been made for the treatment of the men in soldiers' homes and available army and navy hospitals.

When the public health service hospitals were opened, it was recognized that the medical care and attention of the doctors and nurses was not all that was necessary for the recovery of the men. They must have recreation and comforts and must be linked up with their homes. The service was prevented by legal limitations from supplying such conveniences and the American Red Cross was asked to take part in the work. Through this arrangement thousands of service men were assured that in their flight against sickness or disability the interest of the "Greatest Mother" would not wane.

In May, 1919, there were twenty-five hospitals being operated by the public health service. Today there are fifty, with six scheduled soon to open. The original bed capacity has been increased five times. With the expansion of the work, the Red Cross has increased its activities and at present is providing medical social service in all hospitals of the public health service.

has furnished hospital supplies, clothing for the men and material for work baskets and other forms of occupational therapy. It maintains workers in the offices of the district supervisors of the public health service, where the men are interviewed and examined and where they file their claims for disability. The staff of Red Cross workers in the supervisor's office in Boston, for instance, comes in conwith about 2,000 men every month.

In public and private hospitals and sanatoria under contract with the public health service about 9,000 men are receiving treatment. In most of these places the Red Cross maintains workers, who frequently discover men entitled to receive treatment from the government, but who have never even heard of the plans made for their care. In the near future there will be 15,000 beds in contract hospitals available for ex-service men and 13,000 soldiers' homes and army and navy hospitals.

Of the 50,000 service men suffering from nervous and mental diseases as a result of the war, there are thousands whom the government is trying to locate. Red Cross workers have been helpful in identifying some of them who have turned up in state hospitals for the insane. This not only helps the government find the lost men to whom it owes a great debt but also relieves untold anxiety of many a mother and family.

Here is Surgeon General Hugh S. Cummings's tribute to the Red Cross at the completion of a year's work: "I wish to request that the Red Cross consent to continue this very valuable service."

Commenting on the different phases of Red Cross help, Surgeon General Cummings says: "A careful analysis of the assistance given by the American Red Cross to the public health service in the discharge of its obligations to the beneficiaries of the service makes it very clear both from the standpoint of hospital efficiency and benefit to individual patients, the most important is the medical social service."

To get an idea of the scope and value of medical social service, it is necessary to follow a disabled ex-service man through his hospital career.

In the receiving ward he finds a member of the Red Cross staff. She obtains from him information which is of use to her in helping him get his disability-pay or the government allowance due his family. Often the man brings a note from the home service worker in his home town, indicating some special need.

After the man has become established in the hospital he is visited every day by one of the Red Cross ward workers. To her he can appeal for any service which it is impossible for the other attendants to give. She will write home for him, help him in renewing his War Risk insurance or performing any errands he may want.

If it develops that the man is worrying about conditions at home, everything possible is done through the Red Cross chapter in the home town to assist him in straightening out his tangles. The man is kept informed of the progress of what is being done. If suddenly he opens a letter and finds a check for $1,500 or $2,000, the back pay due him for his disability—more money perhaps than he has ever had at one time before—the Red Cross worker advises him about starting a bank account.

If the man is not confined to bed, he can find recreation and entertainment in the Red Cross house, where there are books, billiard and indoor tennis tables, cards and other games, writing material and perhaps music.

On certain evenings he can attend entertainments given on the stage of the Red Cross house under Red Cross auspices, by the Elks, or an American Legion post, the Knights of Columbus or the War Camp Community Service. Parties and picture shows in the wards are also furnished, with occasional excursions when convalescence comes.

If the man is seriously ill, his family is sent for and provided with accommodations in the Red Cross house, so that they may be near him day and night.

Finally, when he is ready to leave the hospital, he is advised about further medical care and the opportunities for training provided by the federal board for vocational education. He is directed to go to the Red Cross headquarters nearest his home town for further service, if it is needed. The local Red Cross is at the same time notified that the man is returning home and may still have problems which call for advice and suggestions.

Just as the Red Cross stood beside the service man through training in this country and in his life overseas, it is still at his call to aid in the struggle for readjustment to normal life.

If the friends and relatives of the boys in the hospitals wish to know about their condition and what is being done for them, a letter addressed to the American Red Cross in the public health service hospitals where they are being treated will receive careful attention.

Had Figured It Out.
Davey stole a penny from his baby brother and his mother caught him at it. She locked him up in the clothes closet, telling him to think things over and try to decide what should be done in the way of punishment. Ten minutes later the mother heard a light tapping on the closet door. Upon opening it, Davey walked out, wearing a solemn expression upon his face. "Well," asked his mother, "have you decided?" "I've been thinking and thinking," he replied, "and I think that Jesus wouldn't like you very well if you whipped your little boy."—Columbus Dispatch.

He meets a distressed lady, makes his heart flop over. He hates the offending man. He is not to take advantage of his opportunity. But he just has to get that she is Dolores Rucy. Jerome is offered a $5,000-a-job by a capitalist friend, Ed J. Jerome. He receives a letter from his own particular, Billy Geary, asking him to finance a gold-mining proposition in Central America and to fifty with him on the profits. Upon he turns down the big offer and decides to answer the call and adventure to Soledad. Jerome goes with John to the depot. They meet the distressed lady on her way to the train. John lifts his hat, but she does not recognize him. John Jerome sees the girl, offers her $10,000 if she induces John to take his job inside of ninety days. The girl accepts. The scene shifts to Buenaventura, Soledad, where Geary, on his upper lip, his heart out looking for a telegram from his old partner, has existed for two months on an extended by Mother Jenks, of a disreputable hotel. through the square to the market, and you may proceed to the market and meet me there. Later we will return to the hotel."

A Creole girl—starry-eyed, beautiful, rich with the glorious coloring of her race—passed him bound for the cathedral across the square, as Webster thought, for she carried a large prayer book on her arm. His glance followed the girl down the walk.

Presently she halted. A young man rose from a bench where he evidently had been waiting for her, and bowed low, his hat clasped to his breast, as only a Frenchman or a Spanish grandee can bow. Webster saw the Creole girl turn to him with a little gesture of pleasure. She extended her hand and the young man kissed it with old-fashioned courtesy.

John Stuart Webster with reverent and wistful eyes watched their meeting.

"Forty years old," he thought, "and I haven't spoken to a dozen women that caused me a second thought, or derly, kissed her, pressed her from him, and walked swiftly away without looking back.

It was a sweet and rather touching little tableau; to John Stuart Webster, imaginative and possessed of a romantic streak in his nature, it was more than a tableau. It was a moving picture!

"I suppose her old man objects to the young fellow," he muttered to himself sympathetically. "And he can't come near the house. They've met here for the fond farewell, and now the young fellow's going out West to make his fortune, so he can come back and claim the girl. Huh! If he wants her, why the devil doesn't he take her? Hello! By Judas priest! Now I know what those two parquets are up to. One of them is the father of that girl. They've been spying on the lovers, and now they're going to corner the young fellow and shingle him for his nerve."

The girl had stood for a moment, gazing after her companion, before she turned with her handkerchief to her eyes, and continued on her way to the cathedral. Webster heard her sobbing as she stumbled blindly by, and he was distressed about her, for all the world loves a loser and John Stuart Webster was an exception to this universal rule.

"By George, this is pretty tough," he reflected. "That young fellow treated that girl with as much gentleness and courtesy as a gentleman should, and I'm for him and against this idea of corporal punishment. Don't you worry, Tibbe, my dear. I'm going to horn into this game myself if it goes too far."

The two dusky skinkers ahead of him, having come to another cross-path, turned into it and came out on the main path in the rear of the young man. Webster noticed that the pair were still waiting on the grass. He padded gently along behind them.

The four were now rapidly approaching the old French market, and the steadily rising babel of voices speaking in French, Italian, Spanish, Creole patois and Choctaw, was sufficient to have drowned the slight noise of the pursuit, even had the young man's mind not been upon other things, and the interest of the two Central Americans centered upon their quarry, to the exclusion of any thought of possible interruption.

Webster felt instinctively that the two men would run and make a concerted attack from the rear. He smiled.

"I'll just fool you two hombres a whole lot," he thought, and stooping, picked up a small stone. On the instant the two men, having approached within thirty feet of their quarry, made a rush for him.

Their charge was swift, but though it was, the little stone which John Stuart Webster hurled was swifter. It struck the young man fairly between the shoulder-blades with a force sufficient to bring him out of his sentimental reverie with a jerk, as it were. He whirled, saw the danger that threatened him, and—sprang to meet it.

"Bravo!" yelled Webster, and ran to his aid, for he had seen now that it was to be knife work. Tragedy instead of melodrama.

The man with the puckered eye closed in with such eagerness it was apparent to Webster that here was work to his liking. The young man raised his light cane, but Pucker-eye did not hesitate. He merely threw up his left forearm to meet the expected blow aimed at his head, lunged forward and slashed viciously at the young man's abdomen. The latter drew back a step, doubled like a jack-knife, and brought his cane down viciously across the knuckles of his assailant's right hand.

"So it is thou, son of a jig," he called pleasantly in Spanish. "I fooled you that time, didn't I?" he added in English. "Thought I would aim for your head, didn't you?"

The blow temporarily paralyzed the assassin's hand; he dropped the knife, and as he stooped to recover it with his left hand the young man, before retreating from Pop-eye, kicked Pucker-eye in the face and upset him.

"Stop it!" shouted Webster.

Pop-eye turned his head at the outcry. The man he was attacking fell into the position of a swordsman engaged, and thrust viciously with the ferrule at the face of the pop-eyed man, who, disregarding Webster's approach, seized the cane in his left hand and with a quick, powerful tug actually drew his victim toward him a foot before the latter let go the stick.

Before he could give ground again Pop-eye was upon him. He grasped the young man by the latter's left arm and held him, while he drew back for the awful disenbowing stroke. As his long arm sped forward the hook of John Stuart Webster's heavy cane descended upon that flexed arm in the crook of the elbow, snagging it cleverly.

The knife never reached its destination!

"You would, would you?" said Webster reproachfully, and jerked the fellow violently around. The man he had rescued promptly struck Pop-eye terrible blow in the face with his left hand and broke loose from the grip that had so nearly been his undoing; then Webster tapped the assassin a meditative rap or two on the top of his sinful head for good measure and to awaken in him some sense of the impropriety and futility of resistance, after which Webster turned to discuss a similar question of ethics with Pucker-eye.

The scar-cheeked man was on his knees, groping groggily for his knife, for he had received a severe kick under the chin, and for the nonce was far from dangerous. Stooping, Webster picked up the knife; then with knife and cane grasped in his left hand he seized Pucker-eye by the nape with his right and jerked him to his feet. The assassin stood glowering at him in a perfect frenzy of brutish, inarticulate fury.

"Take the knife away from the other fellow before he gets active again," Webster called over his shoulder. "I'll manage this rascal. We'll march them over to the market and turn them over to the police." He spoke in Spanish.

"Thanks, ever so much, for my life," the young man answered lightly, and in English, "but where I come from it is not the fashion to settle these arguments in a court of law. To call an officer is considered unclimatic; to shoot a prisoner in this country is I have but one alternative and I advise you, my good friend, to have a little of the same. I'm going to run like the devil."

And he did. He was in full flight before Webster could glance around and in an instant he was lost to sight among the trees.

"That advice sounds eminently fair and reasonable," Webster yelled after him, and was about to follow when he observed that the young man had abandoned his pretty little silver-cane—a walking stick.

"That's too nice a little stick to leave to these brigands," he thought, and forthwith possessed himself of it and the pop-eyed man's knife, after which he hurried not upon the order of his going but went, departing at top speed.

The young man he had saved from being butchered was right. An engaging alliance with the police was, decidedly, not to John Stuart Webster's liking, for should he unfortunately form such an alliance, he would be haled into court as a witness and perhaps miss the steamer to San Buenaventura.

He had planned to spend an hour in the market, drink a cup of cafe noir, smoke a cigarette, and return to his hotel in time for a leisurely breakfast, but his recent bout with grim reality had blunted the edge of romance. He ordered his driver to take him back to the hotel, sprang inside and congratulated himself on his lucky escape.

CHAPTER VIII.

Webster's trunk went aboard the steamer early the following morning, and at noon he entered a taxi with his hand baggage and was driven to the levee where La Estrellita lay tugging gently at her mooring lines. Owing to the congestion of freight and traffic the chauffeur stopped his cab a little distance from the gangplank, where Webster discharged him with a liberal tip.

The latter, however, swung his passenger's bag and suitcase to the ground, picked them up and started for the gangplank.

"Never mind my baggage, lad," Webster called after him. "One of the deck boys will care for it."

The chauffeur turned. "You've been generous with me, sir," he answered, "so I think I had better carry your baggage aboard. If you permit a deck boy to handle it, you merely have to give another tip, and that would be sheer wanton waste. Why shouldn't I earn the one you gave me?"

"I hadn't figured it out that way, son, so here's another half dollar for being the only existing specimen of your species in captivity. My stateroom is No. 34, upper deck, port side," Webster answered, smiling. The man took the tip eagerly and hurried toward the gangplank; the quartermaster on duty shouldered a way for him and he darted aboard.

Webster followed leisurely. At the gangplank the purser's clerk halted him, examined his tickets and punched them.

"Where is the other man?" he asked. "You have two tickets here."

"Oh, that blamed valet of mine," Webster answered, and glanced around as if in search of that mythical fellow to miss the boat. "He added up when he comes—"

Webster ceased speaking abruptly. He was looking straight into the malevolent orbs of Pucker-eye, who was standing just behind the clerk at the foot of the gangplank.

"I wonder if Pop-eye's around, also," Webster thought, and he faced about. Pop-eye was standing in back of him, leaning over the railing of the gangway.

"Which is the valet?" the purser's clerk asked, scanning the names on the tickets.

"Andrew Bowers."

"All right, Mr. Webster," the other answered, with that genial camaraderie that seems inseparable from all of his calling. "When Andrew comes I'll send him aboard."

He started to pass the tickets back to Webster, but a detaining hand rested on his arm, while a dark thumb and forefinger lifted the trailing strips of tickets. Pucker-eye was examining them also.

The purser's clerk drove his elbow backward and shoved him off roughly.

"What do you mean, you black-and-tan hound?" he demanded. "Since when did you begin to O. K. my work?"

Pucker-eye made no reply to this stern reproval. He accepted the elbow with equanimity and faced Webster with an evil smile that indicated mutual recognition.

"Bueno," he said. "The senior he sees sail on La Estrellita for San Buenaventura, no?"

"So you came nosing around to see about it, eh? Doing a little plain gun-shoe work, I see."

Pucker-eye bowed. By the simple exercise of courage and bad manners he had looked at John Stuart Webster's ticket and was now familiar with his name and destination.

Webster glowered darkly at Pucker-eye and said:

"Well, you scoundrelly cutthroat, what are you going to do about it? Try a little of your knife work on me, I suppose?"

The fellow grinned—the kind of grin that is composed of equal parts of ferocity and knowledge of superior strength. That grin did more to disconcert Webster than the knowledge that he had earned for himself two bloodthirsty and implacable enemies, for Pucker-eye was the first of his breed that Webster had ever seen smile under insult. That cool smile infuriated him.

Pucker-eye took out a cigarette case, selected a cigarette and presented the case to Webster. His bad manners in selecting his own cigarette first was deliberate, as Webster knew. It was the Latin-American's method of snowing his contempt.

"We shall meet again, Meester Webster," he said. "May I offer a cigarette for the—what you Americans call—the keepsake? No?" He smiled brightly and closed his puckered eye in a knowing wink.

Webster took his tickets from the purser, folded them, placed them in his pocket and for a few seconds regarded Pucker-eye contemptuously.

"When we meet again, you seem," he retorted quietly, "you shall have no difficulty in remembering me. You may keep your cigarette."

His long, powerful right arm shot out; like a forceps his thumb and forefinger closed over Pucker-eye's rather flat nose; he squeezed, and with a shrill scream of agony Pucker-eye went to his knees.

Still holding the wretch by his proboscis, Webster turned quickly in order that his face might be toward Pop-eye.

"Pop-eye," he said, "if you take a hand in this, I'll twist your nose, too, and afterward I'll throw you in the river."

He turned to Pucker-eye.

"Up, thou curious little one," he said in Spanish, and jerked the unhappy rascal to his feet. The latter clawed ineffectually at the terrible arm which held him, until presently discovering that the harder he struggled the harder Webster pinched his nose, he ceased his struggles and hung limply, moaning with pain and rage in the grip of the American.

"Good!" Webster announced, slacking his grip a little. With his left hand he deftly extracted a hair from each flank of the screaming little scoundrel's scant mustache and held them before the latter's tear-filled eyes.

"My friend," he said gently, "mark now the gringo gives his little dark brother a lesson in deportment. Behold, if I have given thee a souvenir of our meeting, I also have taken one. By this pinched and throbbing nose shall I be remembered when I am gone; by these hairs from thy rat's mustache shall I remember thee. Go, and trust not that nose into a gringo's business again. It is unsafe."

"I am known as Mr. Andrew Bowers, valet de chambre to that prince of gentlemen, Mr. John S. Webster."

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

DIVING FOR FISH.

"Come on, friends," said Oswald Osprey, "and have some fish. I think it would be nice to have a fish banquet, and we birds know how to dive for them. Come along, friends, come along and prepare for the great fish banquet."

"We will all share in doing the work. We will not put it all on one or two to do. We will all help to make the banquet and we will all enjoy it."

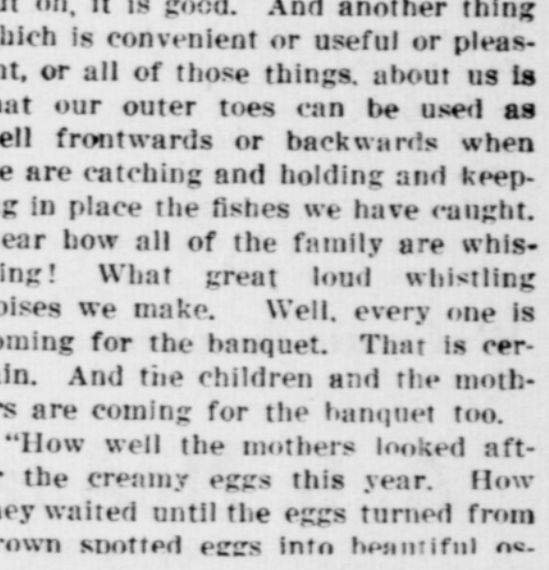

"That is right," said Mr. Fish Hawk. Now Mr. Fish Hawk and Oswald Osprey belonged to the same family but they had different names. Sometimes the family called their family name the American Osprey family and then again they would call themselves the Fish Hawk family, and both names were quite correct.

"Now I am quite an old bird," said Mr. Fish Hawk, "and so my head is whiter than yours, Oswald. And I have fewer white touches to my back feathers than you have. That is the way with the ones of the family who are older."

"Ab, it is good that we have strong feet and that they are powerful, for they help us in holding our food. We care for such slippery food."

"Yes," said Oswald. "It is slippery, but oh, it is good. And another thing which is convenient or useful or pleasant, or all of those things, about us is that our outer toes can be used as well frontwards or backwards when we are catching and holding and keeping in place the fishes we have caught. Hear how all of the family are whistling! What great loud whistling noises we make. Well, every one is coming for the banquet. That is certain. And the children and the mothers are coming for the banquet too."

"How well the mothers looked after the creamy eggs this year. How they waited until the eggs turned from brown spotted eggs into beautiful ospreys or fish hawks with beaks that were curved and great strong feet! And also with a wild look in their eyes as though they could catch what they wanted to catch and see what they wanted to see!

"The mothers built their nests of sticks and they built them mostly in trees this year, though some did build their nests right on the ground. Ah, how alike we all are. How we all care for the water. It is only natural that we should like the water."

"Only natural," said Mr. Fish Hawk. "For we only care for fish. Some birds like all sorts of food, worms and bugs and quite a variety. And children and grown-ups, I believe, like all sorts of food too—meat and fish and ice cream and peanuts!"

"Perhaps they like a few other things too! But we only care for fish. Fish is our food, it has always been our food and it will always be our food. But, Oswald, in addition to your good taste about caring for fish and in being a true member of the family I am glad you know so much about the family and the family ways."

"Now, though, we must talk no longer. The fish are beginning to swim about. We will watch for them and then as we hover over them and over the water while we are still in the air we will see with our sharp eyes just where they are and then we will dive, dive straight after them!"

"There are some people nearby who are watching us. They can see that we are going to have a banquet for there are a goodly number of us around today and plenty of fishes to catch!"

"But let us not disgrace the family. Let us catch the fish with our usual skill, diving right into the water in just the right place and bringing them up with us in our sharp, hooked beaks."

"We will keep our bright eyes on the water and not on our audience—or the people who are watching us, for creatures who watch the audience and not what they are doing don't do very well! But mostly we must have a banquet, for how we all love fish."

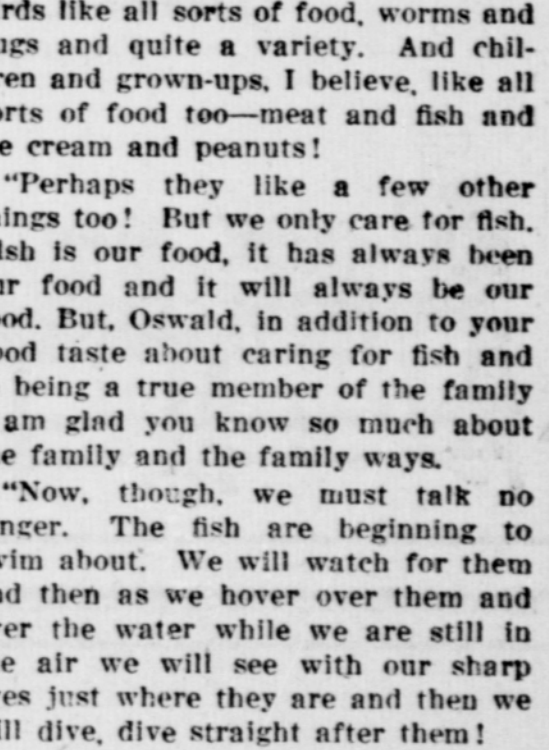

"How we all love fish," said Oswald.

"How we all love fish," they all shrieked.

And they went diving after the fishes and had a most satisfactory fish banquet!

Something Original and Chic

THERE are no rules without exceptions, so far as fashions are concerned. At any rate, that is the conclusion one comes to after reviewing the new styles in suits. Although nearly all suit coats are finger tip length, there are a few very long coats and a greater number of short ones. The short coats vary as to shortness and are to be found among the many box-coat models, some of them reaching only a little way below the waistline.
The box coat is chic—youthful and becoming to slender women. The exception to the rule in length—but in the opposite direction from the box-coat—is found in a few very long coats that are usually somewhat irregular about the bottom, extending to the knees at the longest point.

The very handsome suit pictured has a skirt that is rather narrow and a trifle shorter than the average. The unusual coat must fasten along the shoulder and under the arm as the effect of the embroidery would be spoiled if the pattern were interrupted by a fastening. The designer of this suit not only adopted embroidery as its decoration, but perceived how it could be used in an unusual and very effective way so that the pattern on the coat and that on the skirt are alike, the two halves of one design. The sleeves are gathered into a band which is embellished with a simple design in embroidery and part of the scroll pattern in the coat and skirt. A heavy silk cord and long tassels are features that help to make this a remarkably rich suit, the cord hanging in two loops and the tassels from two ends at the side.

Duvetyn in one of the darker shades, with embroidery matching it in color, vindicates its choice as the loveliest of heavy fabrics.

Pretty Ribbon Furbelows

THE season of pretty furbelows is every season, but as soon as the wind of autumn blows, a lot of new trifles come fluttering in. Late September sees a whole host of lovely accessories of dress and dainty furnishings of all sorts emerging from somewhere and coming to light in the shops. The list of pretty things made of ribbon would fill a small book and they disclose ribbons used in a greater number and greater variety of fascinating accessories than we have had before. In furnishings there are pillows of many designs, foot rests, telephone screens and covers, candle shades, powder bowls and boxes, boudoir dishes, rouge and powder boxes, toilet water and perfume bottles, work baskets, jewel cases, handkerchief and glove cases, slipper holders, shoe trees, hangers, sachets and whole toilet-table sets made of ribbons or covered with them, and then there is the long list of bags. In dress accessories there are camisoles, vestees, boudoir caps, slippers and Jackets, girdles, sashes, garters, neckwear, hair ornaments and innumerable lingerie bows and ornaments. Besides these luxuries for grown-ups and prettier than all are the many lovely belongings of the baby—little sashes and booties, caps, arm bands, pin cushions, pillows, baskets, carriage robes, cushions and bands, hangers and toys.

A few pretty girdles and sashes among the recent new arrivals, have been chosen for illustration here. At the left of the group a long girdle is made by braiding or plaiting narrow ribbons as one plait strands of hair.
The ends of the girdle are finished with ribbon-covered balls of cotton cord. At the top of the group a girdle of satin ribbon appears with a flat bow at one side and a rosette with ends at the other. Just below it are two girdles ending in flower-like rosettes. At the right is a sash, of wide ribbon with four short loops and two long ends, and at the bottom an elastic girdle in which satin ribbon is shirred over a flat elastic band.

LEMONS FOR FRECKLES

Girls! Make a Bleaching Beauty Lotion for Few Cents.

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white, shake well, and you have the best freckle and tan lotion, and complexion beautifier, at very very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of orchard white for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes disappear and how clear, soft and rosy-white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless, and never irritates.—Adv.

Folly of Selfishness.

To be selfish is to be ignoble—to repose on a lower platform for lower gain, when you might choose a higher. To be selfish is to sacrifice the nobler for the meaner ends, and to be sordidly content.—H. R. Haweis.

An East Nashville Grocer Says He Has Used Black-Draught for Years, Whenever Troubled With Torpid Liver.

East Nashville, Tenn.—"You ask me about Black-Draught. It is without doubt the best liver medicine made, and I don't believe I could get along without it," declared Mr. W. N.
Parsons, recently.

Mr. Parsons, who is a prominent grocer at 243 North First street, says further: "I take it (Black-Draught) for sour stomach, headache, bad liver, indigestion, and all other troubles that are the result of a torpid liver. I have known and used it for years, and can and do highly recommend it to every one. I won't go to bed without it in the house. It will do all it claims to do. I can't say enough for it."

Theodor's Black-Draught, which has been in successful use for more than 70 years is a medicine especially adapted to the treatment of many liver troubles. It has proved helpful to thousands and thousands of persons suffering from stomach and liver

We are watching the markets very closely and with the declines are giving them on our goods, but there are some lines in which there is manufactured surplus and hence no decline.

We are asked every day our opinion on the cotton market and we know our opinion; like everybody's is simply a guess and alright when it happens to be right, yet we do know at this time that the trouble with the market is simply "no demand" for cotton because everybody is afraid. The regular purchases instead of each one being afraid to buy because they may decline more we would see better days for cotton and it would mean times for everybody for radical breaks in the cotton market hurts everybody.

Most panics first occur in the minds of the folks before they are reality and hence by our fear we are responsible for causing them.

Let us not think so much about radically changing conditions along in the ordinary way for bad conditions usually turn out better than we expect. We feel that 60 days from now when the farmers' debts eased up and then some cotton left conditions are going to be different to what they now promise to some of us.

We are Headquarters for the Right Price on Everything.
