Theater parties of fashionable persons, as a rule, never consider those around them. They talk all through the performance, much to the annovance of persons sitting near them. A notice should be placed in the theater where everybody could see it, requesting persons in the audience not to talk during the show. If they do not heed the notice ushers should request them to either stop talking or go to the box office and get their money back. Usually persons who go to the theater are lovers of the drama and if the people who talk during performances knew how obnoxious they were making themselves the chances are they would stop.

HIGH HEELED SLIPPER

By BELLE MANIATES.

Allene was indulging in the afterdinner peace of the big broad veranda when her next door neighbor, Billy, came up the steps. Billy had been her comforter and confidant since their kindergarten days. "Oh, Billy! We must have all the fun and rag time we can! It will be all shut off for two weeks!"

"How did I know?" she exclaimed, equally mystified. "How mystified. did you know? Papa just got word that some business friend of his, a Mr. Reeves -Philip Reevesis coming here to accept one of papa's repeated invitations to visit. Papa has been giving me all sorts of advice and lessons in deportment. He describes this stupid man as thirty-five, dignified, scholarly, et cetra. That sounds well to papa, but it is the description of a bore and a prig to Three wretched days passed in which Allene managed to maintain a demeanor that satisfied her father's ideas of decorum, although she felt horribly unnatural. Then came the reaction. Her father received an urgent summons to a neighboring town on business. With his departure, Allene's strained dignity vanished.

"Where's Mr. Reeves?" she asked of the maid as she came into the house from a drive.

"He went to the factory." was the Free and alone! She hadn't felt so unrestrained since her childhood days. She flew to the piano, and the room rang with the maddest music in her repertoire. Then her voice burst forth in gay, little snatches of song that revealed her exuberance of spirit. At last, when she paused for breath, a voice behind her said: "Why haven't you played and sung like that before?"

She wheeled about quickly on the piano bench. "How long have you been in here?"

she asked faintly. "I came at the first sound of the music. It is just the kind I like. I am not educated up to classical music." "Oh, I feel so much better, Really, I can't live up to papa's program any

"What do you mean?" he demanded. Then impetuously and impulsively she told him the deportment her father had prescribed, and the heroic efforts she had made to live up to it. A most delightful week of pleasure followed. Saddle horses, automobiles and mountain wagon were brought into use for various excursions and picnics. Allene found in Philip a man as companionable as was Billy.

Crossing the lawn one day when the weather had suddenly turned too cold to permit of driving comfortably. Allene stepped on a stone, and stumbled. "It's those absurd French-heeled slippers!" exclaimed Philip indignant-"There ought to be a law against their manufacture!" Therefore when Allene came down princess among women." Fatima, cording to Mahomet, was the four stairs that evening, out of sheer perperfect woman, she being his below verseness, she chose her very most extreme-heeled slippers.

the interior of Papua there are men with tails. Similar beliefs have been held in many parts of the world and many ages, sometimes from impressions of apes, sometimes from more or less spiteful credulity about a people's neighbors. For centuries it was a common gibe on the Continent that Englishmen had tails. It originated from the story that the people of Canterbury or Strood, having mocked at St. Thomas riding upon a little ass and cut off its tail, were punished with the curse that thenceforth all their boys should be born with tails. And the scoffs of other Englishmen at the "Kentish longtails" rebounded upon the whole nation, so that even in the time of Edward VI. Englishmen ••••••• broad suffered from the taunt. PROFESSIONAL

IE FINISHED HIS WORK

By J. A. TIFFANY.

The man was old and broken in spirit. His life had been a failure, as all lives are, measured by the degree in which they fulfill the dreams of youth.

At two-and-twenty he had mistaken the flush of enthusiasm for the fire of genius. After a quarter of a century's devotion to small parts in thirdrate theatrical companies, he had been ferced to the conclusion that a man ets no more, or less, than his labor is worth; and that his own labor was worth very little.

His wife had been beautiful. Now, he was a poor, faded, common-place creature. Her illusions, too, were all one, like her beauty; and, worse than that, the man's illusions in regard to her were dead also. She had no more talent for acting than had he; and they both knew it

Of gentle birth, she still retained ome traces of refinement, in spite of her long sojourn in Bohemia. But the novelty, the charm, the mystery of the life were gone.

Every illusion had been destroyed, save one; and to that they clung with desperate tenacity. At an early period in their married life the man had conceived a great literary project.

"I've been thinking, Evelyn," he had said one day, "of writing a historical account of the drama from its first inception down to the present day. Imagine the possibilities of such a work!

"Splendid!" the woman had ex claimed. "Why don't you begin at

And he had begun that very day. He knew then that it was no mean task, this that he had set himself. It meant much reading, research, condensing, writing, re-writing and writing again. Not a book that a man could rattle off in six months or a year.

The one illusion that the hard reali ies of life had failed to dissipate was this: That though both were failures at acting, yet one day the man was to achieve fame for himself and a competence for them both by the publication of his great history of the drama-the dedication to a grateful world of his life's work.

For twenty years and more he had stuck stoically to his task.

Often the last nickel went for paper, while the children were crying for bread. Present necessities were forgotten, or ignored, in the anticipation of comforts to be bought through the sale of Reginald's life work.

"I have finished it at last, Evelyn," the man announced one day-one day while they were in Baltimore. "I have finished my life's work."

For three months he awaited the publishers' decision, calling upon them at intervals, only to be told that his manuscript would receive the earliest attention possible. Three long, weary anxious months; and then the man took to his bed in a high fever. He was delirious, and raved about his

"Finished, finished!" he would shout exultingly. "I have finished my life's work!"-and another time he would repeat the same words, with a wail of anguish and despair.

Then the woman passed her cooling hand across his brow, and sought to comfort him by saying his life's work was only just begun.

One evening as he lay helpless on his pillow, the crimson rays of the setting sun shone suddenly into the room and lighted up his pallid face, handsome even in emaciation. He started up to his elbow, with wide staring eyes, exclaiming: "Finished-finished! I have finished my life's work. I am going

And the tears that welled to Evelyn's eyes had fallen from them to her cheeks, she looked once more upon his face and saw his words were true. The man was dead. He had finished

And while the woman sat in silent grief, gazing on the dead face of him whom she had loved so well, there came a gentle tap upon the door, It was Mr. Hayes, an elderly get tleman from the publishers' office, who had called once or twice before to in quire after the health of the author of the bulky manuscript.

"At last, my dear lady," he aid, "I am able to report that our house has accepted your husband's life work."

"Your house?" the woman echoed, failing at first to recognize her visitor or comprehend his meaning-the one, cruel sense of widowhood overwhelming all things else.

Then, as the recollection of the fatal book that had sapped her husband's life away came back to her with bitter memories, she said:

"Your house? Too late-too late! He has gone to another house. There his life's work can be judged the best. His life work will be accepted or rejected, in his father's house."
