time and labor, but if you wait too long to apply controls, there is only one way to do the job. By Hand.

Is Johnsongrass a problem for you? If you can't fight it, join it. Cost of herbicides to control the grass are much more than fertilizer, and the nutrient value of Johnsongrass is comparable to many of the cultivated grasses grown for hay or forage.

Johnsongrass should be cut in the "boot" stage, or right before the seed heads form. An application of fertilizer according to soil tests will help it grow rapidly and maintain nutrients. Reapplications are necessary if more than one cutting is to be obtained, and when the grass is grazed, applications about every six weeks will result in a high quality feed.
