Obstacles In The Way Of Boycott Plan

ONE of the most entertaining bits of business this winter ought to be the attempt to persuade the American woman to stop wearing silk stockings in order that the villainous Japanese may be foiled in their designs on China.

From the shapely legs of American womanhood to the muddy battlefields of Shanghai may seem like a long jump. But there is a connection, spelled simply in the one word: boycott.

The argument runs something like this:

Japan is making war on China in plain violation of all existing treaties. If one nation can treat another nation so, no nation is safe from the threat of force; America, accordingly, must do her part to restrain the Japanese.

But the Japanese don't restrain easily. They have, in fact, shrugged off all protests. And no American cares to see his country go to war to make the protests effective. There remains, then, only boycott. If all lovers of peace and goodwill will stop buying Japanese goods, the Japanese will see the error of their ways and the dove of peace will flutter once more over war-racked China.

Which brings us back to silk stockings.

JAPAN'S principal export to this country is silk. If we are going to boycott Japan, we have got to stop buying silk. And if we are going to stop buying silk, we have somehow got to persuade the American woman to encase her rather limbs in something besides silk stockings—in lace, in rayon, or perhaps in the plain old-time cotton article.

And that, when you stop to think about it, is going to be something of a job. Never has there been a country as leg-conscious as modern America. The American woman, you might say, struggled for generations to win recognition of her right to wear silk hose day in and day out regardless of her station in life. Anyone who imagines that she is easily going to surrender that right, even for a noble and altruistic cause, may well have another guess coming.

All of which compels one to wonder just how effective these international boycotts—talked of so freely these days—are ever going to be.

There seems to be a school of thought which would substitute the boycott for war, which would make of it a method which, which an erring nation may be clubbed bloodlessly back into good behavior. On paper it is all very simple. In actual practice it may be quite different.

For we buy goods in international trade, not because we admire the people who make them, but because we like to have the goods. It is going to take deep and strong emotion to make such boycotts successful. Is our desire to see Japan restrained, for instance, quite as intense as our desire to see Japan restrained, for instance, quite as intense as our wish to have the American woman continue to wear silk hose?

Maybe it is. If so, watch out Japan. But then again, maybe it isn't.

Beauty Shop Equipped In Modern Form

With the recent arrival of the latest in silver and black modernistic furnishings, the Modern Beauty Shop, under the ownership and management of Mrs. J. S. Lea, is living up to its name in every sense of the word.

New dressing tables and manicure tables in black with chromium-plated frames, and matching chairs upholstered in black leather add a distinctive note to the individual booths, while a new shampoo board, lavatory and leather and chromium-plated chair furnish the shampoo booth completely in new equipment. Attractive wicker chairs and divan are at the disposal of customers under the dryers and those waiting to be served.

Mrs. Lea's contribution to this vicinity in the beautician line began several years ago when she opened her first shop in Matador, in her home. Later she joined in a partnership with Miss Dora Jameson, in the latter's shop at the rear of the Sanitary Barber Shop. A little over a year ago they purchased controlling interest in the Deluxe Beauty Shop, moving their equipment to the present location in the Rogue Theatre building, and operating under the firm name of the Modern Beauty Shop. A transaction was completed last month in which Mrs. Lea bought Miss Jameson's interest in the business.

The renovation of the shop makes it one of the most up-to-date of its kind in this section, not only in equipment but in operation as well as the shop specializes in the latest styles of hairdress and the most modern methods of beauty culture.

The personnel of the Modern Beauty Shop, in addition to Mrs. Lea includes Mrs. Noble Groves, former operator of the Deluxe Beauty Shop, and Mrs. A. J. Hodges as regular operators, with Mrs. J. J. Cooper assisting as extra on Saturdays and other occasions.

Odis Crowell Will Play In Wichita Game

H. S. U. Ace To Have Tackle Position

When the Hardin Simmons university Cowboys attempt to corral the swarm of Hornets from Emporia State, Kansas, at Wichita Falls clash on November 6, co-captain Odis Crowell, Matador ace footballer, will no doubt occupy his left tackle position for the full sixty minutes of play. "Odie," as he is known to his teammates, was the only Rancher representative who remained intact for the full time in the bone crushing Loyola melee when the squad journeyed to the West Coast for its first of two California conflicts scheduled this season.

The Wichita conflict marks the final opportunity for fans from Matador and the surrounding territory to see Crowell engage in gridiron tactics. With the close of this year's games for the Cowboys will come the finale for the outstanding tackle and co-captain; when diplomas are awarded to graduating H. S. U. seniors next June, Crowell will take his place among the ex schoolboy grid players.

Crowell received his freshman grid training at Amarillo Junior college and has lettered two years on the Hardin Simmons varsity squad. An outstanding tackle, fast, and vicious, Odis is noted for his fine work on defense. Varsity rosters show in their detail columns: age, 23; weight, 205; and height, 6 feet, 3 inches.
