The larger the I guess; from what they tell me, other points, where they have city the more nearly the people go to the devil, according to Roger, who knows, judging by his statistics. Small figures may lie, but not a whole body of statistics. The lowest per cent of attendance is around New York and Washington, just as expected, and the highest attendance is in the rural southeastern states and this is a disappointment to the Midwest where the rural districts think they still pay attention to their religious duties. Roger places much of the blame on the home and thinks that influence should be for church attendance; then, he adds, sermons hould be vitalized, not meaning more lively, perhaps, but with more religion in them; that each church should have a definite iritual and intellectual goal, as well as werking for the economic well being of the people.

Statistician Embson does not point out that what the world needs is a rebaptism of real religion, and that it can get this only through the Word and that this, under the plans of the burghest can be presented only nurches, can be presented only leaders with real religion themselves and who preach the Bible, instead of lecturing to the people, or lecturing them. The people go where they can be fed religiously and spiritually.

There is hardly another statistician who is one, two, three with Roger Babson and it might be well to study his figures and either accept and act upon them or else disprove them. They can be changed within the next four years by the people themselves who belong to churches, but who act as if the churches belong to them and treat them in accordance.-Daily Ledger, Noblesville,
