In London two posters were nailed side by side. One read, "God is our refuge and strength." The other read, "He can't be everywhere. Call a policeman if you need help."

But God is everywhere. He sees and knows everyone and everything.

This is a detective truth. When we know that God sees us, it serves as a warning to keep us from sin.

It's a protective truth. God's before us, He'll be our guide. He's behind us, no ill can e'er betide. God's beside us, to comfort and to cheer. God's around us, why should we fear?

OUR HOME ... Its Value

Re-evaluating the Value of Family Worship. It has been said that a child is not likely to find a father in God until God in his father. Likewise, our children are not likely to become worshipers until they see a consistent lifestyle of worship in the home. Children are great imitators. They follow until they learn to lead. For children to become worshipers, they must be taught, but they must also see worship in action within the home.

Today's norm for the family is an evening in front of the TV. More often than not we talk about our problems instead of our blessings and the power of God. We often rely upon the preacher or Bible Class teacher to challenge our children to want more of God. Yet if we expect our children to be part of the generation that "seeks the Lord," we must show them how, by word and action.

Remember, the most important aspect of family worship is consistency. A child who constantly hears that he is going to be in trouble when he misbehaves, yet is never disciplined, will finally figure out that he can get by without punishment. When worship in the home is only a sporadic occurrence, a child will soon note its lack of importance and figure, "if it's good enough for Dad, it's good enough for me." Value is easy to see.
