Sale Tax Increases January 1

AUSTIN, Tex. -- State Comptroller Bob Bullock Tuesday reminded Texans not to forget the increase in the sales tax rate that begins New Year's Day -- January 1, 1987.

"Only the rate has changed. In every case, what is and what is not taxable under current sales tax law remains the same when the new law goes into effect January 1," reminded Bullock.

A special session of the Texas Legislature raised the state's sales tax rate one and one-eighth percent to deal with a shortfall of tax revenue caused by the collapse of oil prices.

The State sales tax rate goes from 4.125 to 5.25 percent. Comptroller Bullock said that in many areas of Texas the state rate and local sales taxes, including transit and city sales taxes will put the combined rate to as much as 7.25 percent. In making accounting changes to collect the new tax rate, businesses should have adjusted cash registers and alerted and trained their personnel to collect sales tax at the new local rates.

The new law also raised the motor fuels tax 5 cents -- from 10 cents to 15 cents a gallon.

"My office has contacted taxpayers and sent new rate cards and updated information on these state tax changes," Bullock said.

Texans with questions may call the Comptroller's office toll-free line at 1-800-252-5555.

Part-Time Closing of Motley County ASCS

The Motley County ASCS office will be closed from 8:00 a.m. until 12 noon each Tuesday and Thursday beginning on January 6, 1987. County Offices are continually being required to do more and more work to administer the current farm programs. With the implementation of the Special 1986 Disaster Program (We have not been notified that we have been approved as of yet), and the preparation of 1986 Cotton Loans, 1986 Cotton Loan Deficiency Payments, 1986 Final Deficiency Payments, and 1987 Advance Payments, it has become necessary to close for this short period to successfully accomplish these tasks and to provide the best possible service to the producers of Motley County. We would like to request your cooperation as we try to better serve you.

What Will Your New Year Bring?

by Michelle Bearden

Did you give the New Year a resounding ring in, yet? Some, I'm sure, may view the new year with a little bit of an anxious eye--especially after the whacking they've taken from 1986. Still, despite what the economy or Natural disasters can wreak on us, it's basically up to us how each of our years turn out. No matter how dismal '86 may look to some, it had some unforgettable highlights.

I can empathize with those in our community who have been forced into a career change and those who stridently have sought ways to keep farming, ranching and business operations at even a break-even point. Those who are not being held back by fear of change deserves a medal in my book. Although not forced into a change, exactly, I determined last year that after spending over a decade as an R.N., it was time to follow my version of hitch your wagon to a star. Leaving a well-respected, well-paying, career for a chance to write has been both traumatic and exhilarating at the same time. Several times, especially when my bank balance got particularly scimpy, I decided I must have lost my mind along the way somewhere. It was especially difficult to go from something I felt I had a degree of expertise in, to something I knew I didn't know a thing about. At this point in time I still have no idea where this will lead, but it sure has taken the ho-hum out of life to perch out on a limb and bob around.

With a good-size portion of our population holding their own in advanced years, I've overheard a few who are happy just to be able to welcome in another new year. You, who are of a mature age, hold a special place in my heart for your experience and wisdom.

1986 will live on in Texas history as our Sesquicentennial year. Our own Sesquicentennial celebration was memorable in a variety of ways but most of all because of the community cooperation and support it received. The payoff for that effort was little more than a pat on the back and a feeling of contributing to a real accomplishment for all the people who were involved with it. As a contribution to another community project, the Library, it also provided the financial nucleus of a budding library building fund. Despite some minor conflicts, the Sesquicentennial Festival was an over-all success. It just goes to show what we can do when we get going -- and in one direction.

What 1987 brings us largely depends on us. If we choose to become shrouded with a doomsday outlook--no doubt that will be exactly what will come to pass. But, if you choose, each of us can be alert to opportunities sprawled in our pathways, waiting for us to stumble to them. Each of us, today, has the opportunity, first and foremost, to be the very best we can be...whatever that "best" may be. Can you imagine what it would be like in this county if every single person was motivated to be the very best he or she could be? A wife being the very best wife she could be; a child being the best student he could be; a storekeeper being his best; an employer being the kind of employer he would like to work for; a teacher who strived towards being better all the time; a public official who is dedicated to being the best in their position. The implications are staggeringly wonderful.

Let 1987 be the best year of your life. Let this new year be the year you give back to a community that has so blessedly given all of us who now live here and those who have been nurtured so that they could soar successfully in other places. Without the stability, the caring, and the security found in generous quantities in this community over the years, I wonder how many successes could still be attributed to both former and present residents of Motley County.

To all of our readers, I wish you a New Year filled with health, prosperity and an overbrimming enthusiasm for life.

Jo Ann's Jots & Jingles

Can you believe it is 1987? It seems the older one gets the faster the years fly by.

I once read a poem about "the land of beginning again". If I could start all over again, would I really do anything differently?

There are a lot of insignificant things that I might want to change. I would prefer to be a blond. I would prefer to be thin. As a child I would not have chewed my fingernails. I would have been demure and helpless as a child instead of aggressive and tomboyish. I would have listened to my mother and practiced the piano more.

BUT the things I would not change far outweigh the things I would change.

I would still have tears in my eyes when the flag passed by and the band played the national anthem.

I would still love the touch and smell of a little baby.

I would still love cats bathing and purring.

I would still be thrilled by the tales of the old West--especially cowboys!!

I would still love the tales of missionaries sacrificing their all to spread the Good News.

I would still marry the same man and have the same daughters and grandchildren.

I would still love to write poetry and prose.

I would still not be ashamed to cry at a sentimental movie.

So, why worry about "a land of beginning again"? Just be glad it is 1987 and you can still enjoy the multitude of joys again that you have experienced in the past!!

HAPPY NEW YEAR!!

"BUYER'S REMORSE" A COMMON AILMENT

As the bills for holiday expenses come rolling in this month, many consumers will be feeling a good case of "buyer's remorse."

That's simply a fancy term for the depression that follows overspending. For some of us, overspending may be an occasional problem, but for others it can become compulsive.

Compulsive spenders usually have the sense of being out of control and often hide their purchases from embarrassment. A poor self-image is worsened by more buying because the underlying need for approval or excitement often is not met.

Impulse buying, or buying that is not a part of an overall plan, affects virtually everyone at one time or another. For example, have you ever gone to the grocery store to pick up a gallon of milk and walked out with two bags of groceries, personal care items, magazines or other merchandise?

Impulse buying is not automatically "bad." But it does add up, and can mean that important items cannot be purchased because the money has already been spent in other ways.

The marketplace contributes to both compulsive and impulsive buying. For some people the attraction is the pleasant activity of shopping and buying. Others "can't pass up a good bargain."

If your New Year's resolutions involve improving your family financial management, examining spending habits can be a good place to start.

"Buyer's remorse," or the feelings of depression that can follow overspending, may be relieved with some thought and action.

Know when you have shopped enough. Since shopping takes time, effort, energy and money, it makes sense that you should spend the most time shopping for the most expensive items.

Avoid shopping for items you know are too expensive for you to afford. Also, consider the total cost for shopping, including the gasoline, food, parking and the product or service.

Make a spending plan. If you can't afford to buy everything you need or want at one time, a plan for buying one thing at a time over a certain period may help.

If you are angry and go shopping, leave your credit cards at home. Try window shopping to calm down and think through the buying decision before you make a purchase.

You may want to look one day and buy another. A cooling-off period helps put things in perspective.

Work on developing wants other than "more things." Seek adventure and diversions that do not cost money.

Keep in mind that "defensive spending" of the "I can spend as much as you can" syndrome can quickly wreck your bank account and probably will not make you feel any better.

Controlling spending is a good first step toward better financial management. It can also help you conquer feelings of "buyer's remorse" and substitute the greater satisfaction of achieving your financial goals.

Because of it's nature in general, wine is a mocker and beer a brawler; whoever is led astray by them is not wise. Prov. 20:1

YESTER YEARS

The other day in the yester-years, the railroad men were surveying out this way and wanted to make a town upon my land, but as in most cases, a few hearty souls had preceded them by many moons, for they shortly followed the cattlemen and the cattle and often now days, as I look about and view the changes the country has undergone, it seems oddly strange to be able to recall how many towns were built at, on, or near what was known by the cowmen as roundup grounds. Places in those yester-years where the general range boss had the cattle thrown together, consequently places where the cowboys met to get acquainted or to renew acquaintance of former times, when they constituted just about all the people to be found for miles and miles around. So to the cowboy, the roundup grounds he knew became places he never forgot and many years later, perchance as he travels here and there, he is able to recall those old landmarks and milestones in his memory, in many cases the men present, the time and the brands of cattle the different men worked.

The town of Aspermont covers the old roundup ground as does the town of Dickens and to be a little more explicit; both places are county seats and the Temple of Justice sits in Solomon's mien today, where in other years the cowboy and the cutting horse had ruled supreme.

Swenson lazily nestles and sleeps in the valley where in years gone by the cowboy and his horse labored, toiled, and sweated in the dust, heat and grime of the summer round up.

Peacock, while not on a roundup ground, still it is within a half of mile or so of what used to be known as the White-flats roundup ground.

Oriauna in the old 00 range in the valley and on the banks of the Salt Fork is quite near a roundup ground where cattle were worked and milled by the thousand. Spur is also near the Spade Pens roundup in the old Spur Range.

Crosbyton is in the old Two Buckle Range. As you may travel that way Westwardly bent and enter the town by crossing the railroad tracks; you can note a lake to the left that borders the town on the southeast. Right along there between the depot and the square, I have helped to work roundups and sang to the sleeping cattle while on night guard; years and years before anyone ever dreamed of making stealthy though silent changes take place.

Estacado was there at the time, though it had seen its glory fade away and Lubbock had been born on the banks of the Yellow House and was enjoying its infancy and never a dream of its future sky-line that could be seen many miles away. Lubbock nestles on the south side of the Yellow House just as the two draws come together and as the bluffs cease to be abrupt and rocky. You might say that Lubbock is located on the terminus of the living surface water on the Yellow House. All along there since the white man has known it, water could be found in abundance, during the driest of seasons and while I never worked with cattle there, I knew somewhere around Lubbock in the days of the cattle reign and kingdom, could be found wagons, remudas, men and roundups with its resultant herds, for wherever lasting water could be had, you also found cattle in great numbers.

Idalou, Abernathy, Petersburg and all other towns lying westward to the fenced ranges of the XIT are new creations placed where the Antelope, Mustang horses, coyote, wolves and cattle roamed among the mirages that sectioned, mothered, and nursed as her children.

Now! Well, it is all so different. It is still the Plains, but a different Plains to the one I first knew.

What a treat, and it would be like sitting at the feet of Gamaliel, could one be privileged at this time to meet and talk to Old Man Singer, the man that created the center of activity there on the Yellow House not far from the present commercial and Educational Center (North of North Loop), known the country over as the city of Lubbock, Texas; for Singer was there when the cattlemen arrived and gathered the facts and lore of that section, for helped to make its earliest history. The age, the people, and the customers Old Man Singer knew, has become the a thriving city there and so it is, all over West Texas today.

Lorenzo on the plains occupies the site where Al, Jim, Dick, Joe Jay and I roped and tied down the last Mustang horses ever caught by us on the prairie and it ever recurs to my mind when passing that way to conjure up both pleasure and sadness. The sadness lies in the fact that part of those boys have passed from earthly scenes, while the balance are scattered everywhere and seldom meet. If and when they do, it is never in the saddle as in former times. The jingle of each others spurs, the jolly laugh as the windies were spun has been forever silenced by the passage of time, while the whole country has changed, and is so very different in looks and customs even to those that have been here all along and has seen the vanished age, retained in the minds and memory of only a very few living today. No other record was ever made at the time, so the spirit of the times is all but lost to even the present generation. The future can only know it, if they ever know it at all, from black and white as related by someone else.

I spent the summer of 1893 there on the Yellow House from Lubbock up the North prong of the canyon to what was called Eagle Springs, somewhere I think in Hale County; and then in the summer of 1894, I landed back on the Yellow House in Hale County with the SAS Heart and the TJ Heart cattle owned by Bean and handled by the Heart boys that had ranged in the Croton Breaks country for some years.

Other roundup grounds have grown up in brush and were abandoned years ago, while others became fields of cane, cotton, and corn. Perchance, in many cases the farmer noted with wonder why a part of his land seemed poor and droughty and refused to grow crops that were healthy and strong, never dreaming those spots had been roundup or bed grounds for countless thousands of cattle when the ground was heavy with moisture and that the trampling of the cattle had packed the sub-soil so firmly that little moisture was ever able to penetrate beneath it, when a thoroughly deep-breaking would have often corrected the weakness had he only have known.

So you hear no more the lay of the old-time cowboy as he sang: "Oh, I am a jolly cowboy, from Texas now I hale, Give me my quirt and pony I'm ready for the trail; I love the rolling prairies, be free from care and style, Behind a herd of longhorns, I'll journey all my life."

Possibly none of them ever thought for a moment that the longhorn cattle, the wagon and the cow work as he knew it would ever cease to be, so placidly lived in the thought he would always be able to enjoy his freedom.

SPC Offers Academic Courses For Occupational Students

LEVELLAND--When Joe Zarate, Jr. is not studying about heat pumps in South Plains College's refrigeration/air conditioning program, the sophomore from Matador is learning about equations in a college beginning algebra class.

Zarate is one of more than 100 occupational training students at SPC who are working toward an associate degree through a new, optional program at SPC which provides day-time academic classes for occupational training students.

"I have taken classes in drafting and beginning algebra under the new system," says Zarate, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Zarate Sr. of Matador and a 1985 graduate of Matador High School.

Senior Citizens Report

by Iris Blevins

The Senior Citizens building will open around 10:00 New Year's Day for a covered dish luncheon and for a day of fellowship and fun. Get your covered dish and come by with us.

Just think: We are starting a New Year, and we want it to be even better than 1986, which was a wonderful year for the Senior Citizens. Naming a few of the events were Wagon Train; Art Show; and the 4-H Group, who prepared and served the senior citizens an excellent dinner in our new building.

We thank each and everyone who have helped to make 1986 a pleasurable year for the senior citizens.

We want each senior citizen to help make 1987 a year of pleasure and happiness for our community who are nearly all senior citizens.

Come join us in games and fun for the evening.

"I live at the college dorm and I have a lot of spare time for studying. I like the fact that I can take academic classes toward my degree at the same time I am being trained in an occupation," explained Zarate.

Under the former system, Zarate would have had to take academic classes at night or attend school for an additional semester to attain the necessary 15 semester hours of academic courses. Now he can receive both his associate in applied science degree and certificate of proficiency in just two years.

Zarate is discovering the benefits of academic courses.

"I can apply what I have learned in both the drafting and algebra classes directly to my studies in refrigeration/air conditioning. I have a better understanding, a better concept," he said.

Occupational students at SPC have had the opportunity to earn an associate degree for several years. But the trend toward academics is increasing.

"More and more companies in business and industry are requiring that the employees they hire have a college degree," explains Bill Richards, chairman of SPC's occupational training department. "They need employees who can understand the complex technological changes in business and industry and who can also communicate effectively both orally and in writing."
