Stampede of the Goddesses

by Paula Palmeyer

One day, oh long ago, I was a pretty maiden, a goddess named Sania. I had many sisters, well, eleven is enough. Oh, yes, I remember their names. There was Thrill, Chiffon, Lax, Swan, Dove, Trend, Ivory, Joy, Gentle, Endust and Pride.

A mean god, called Dust Mop, visited the palace one day, and begged Endust to come home with him and marry his son, Dust Cloth, but she would not. Next, he tried to persuade Pride that she should marry Dust Cloth, but she refused. Pride ran to her sisters, and they all started running from Dust Mop, and as far as I know they are still running yet. So that is my story of the stampede of the goddesses.

60 acres from erosion. One livestock pond and one recreation pond, near completion, are the sum total of practices applied. Only 21 different landowners applied the measures.

With several thousand acres of cropland in the county, the need for protection is great. We have around 370 different landowners and nearly everyone has a need for at least one permanent measure.

With land values what they are today the conserving of the soil can not be ignored. Renewed interest by landowners and assistance from staff members should cause conservation to move forward faster.

Plans should be made now and application of needed measures started as soon as possible. The investment will be great, but the returns will be great. ER — act at once.
