Men to ride the river with

THERE is an old western saying that tried friends are "men to ride the river with . . . ". This is a tribute to the men who put the Tribune back "in business" after a mechanical failure which put this weekly newspaper completely out of business early Monday.

It was inevitable that the electric metal heating pot on the Linotype machine should eventually fail after 31 years of constant service. After a check by James "Pup" Price of the West Texas Utilities Co., it was found that the heating elements were burned out. A telephone call to Dallas disclosed that the parts were not in stock and would need to come from Another telephone call was made to Plainview to "Doctor" of Linotypes Buster Smith, who said he would try to find the needed parts closer than New York. He did, indeed, find the new elements. Tribune employee Sixto Castillo drove to Plainview for them. In the mean time "Pup" Price was tryng to remove the old elements, solidified into the metal pot with dirt and dross and years of heating and cooling.

West Texas Utilities Co. Manager Freddie Welling decided to help Price remove the elements about 7 p.m. Monday. Later he called Bill Jameson (who had been in bed with the flu for two days) to use his acetylene welding equipment. The three men worked until 1 a.m. Tuesday before the last of the old elements came out. At 3 a.m. the new elements were in place and the machine was hot and the Tribune was back in business, thanks to men who will do to ride the river
