Frances Traweek Morris On Himalayan Expedition

By Fran Morris

Wind horses in many colors raced across the summit of Deo Tibba.
They were printed on papers along with Budhist prayers and were released by Lama Tashi to be carried by the winds into the cosmos. The brilliant morning sun lit the Himalayas rising in all directions like frozen waves crested in white. There were places where no man had been and places with no names. In the valleys between lived many unique cultures, but the places we could see best were not the places.

To the East the region's most impressive peaks, Popsura, Kulu Pamori and White Sail, thrust jagged crowns skyward. It was there, on a high altitude trek over a remote pass near White Sail, that I had first seen 20,000 ft. Deo Tibba. It was there, in Northern India, that the journey toward Deo Tibba began.

I had been to the Himalayas on high-altitude treks seven times before. Often I indulged in the fantasy of searching the upper and expense of climbing in the Himalayas, however, discouraged me from making the dream a reality. Later in Delhi, Alok Chandola, director of EXPLORINDIA, who was the outfitter for my treks, encouraged me to give it a try. I knew that I could depend on the support given by his organization and began to formulate plans for my first Himalayan climbing expedition the next summer.

I had climbed many classic routes in the Swiss Alps but climbing in the Himalayas is not as implies to packing up rose and regumens and

That climbers many classic routes in the swiss Alps but climbing in the Himalayas is not as simple as packing up rope and crampons and heading out. Acquiring a climbing visa and meeting the requirements of the Indian Mountaineering Foundation is time consuming and frustrating. One needs the help of someone with Chandola's expertise to help work out conflicts in booking which might arise and many other minor details. It is necessary to start

Helpful Hints By Catherine Henderson

1) Restore red fireplace brick to their original color with boiled linseed oil, then let them dry. Apply oil with brush. Apply sparingly, so it will be completely absorbed.
2) Your feet are your foundation. If you are going on a long hike, rub bottom of your feet twice doily for ten days with alcohol. It will toughen the skin and prevent blisters.
3) The value of the Russian Rouble amounts to about 84 cents in

4) Sometime when your car seems off balance and rattling, you may need a new tire on the left front wheel. It is more exposed to traffic than the other wheels.

5) Inside the house, if you have a flowerpot that continues to drip, take your shower cap, pull over the bottom of the flower pot for a short time to catch the excess water.

human health. It couls occur in several ways.

In addition to the nutrient minerals, acid rain causes leaching from soil of heavy metals such as mercury and cadmium. These metals accumulate in lakes and streams, and in the tissue of fish that are present in those bodies of water. In sufficient amounts, these metals may become toxic. The National Commission on Air Quality has pointed out studies showing that fish caught in acid waters in both the U.S. and Canada have a higher concentration of mercury than fish taken from non-acidic waters.

Hance Blasts Opponents For Gay Rights Support

Kent Hance, one of the ading Democratic Senate

Hance also took issue with his opponents for their support of amnesty for illegal aliens. The Lubbock Democrat is against proposals which would allow illegal aliens already living in the country to stay. "Amnesty would take away a lot of American jobs, and encourage more illegal aliens to enter the country," Hance warned. He also pointed out that some studies show that amnesty would add an estimated $25 billion to federal expenditures, because illegal expenditures, because illegal aliens would be eligible for benefits from federal social

"Bob Krueger and Lloyd Doggett want to go back to the old days of tax and tax, and spend and spend. The only thing worse than a $200 billion dollar deficit, would be a $200 billion dollar tax increase, that would destroy the economic recovery," Hance said. He continued to urge for a more flexible monetary policy, and lower interest rates. "It's time to make the tax cuts put in place more effective. That is the way to continued economic recovery, and lower deficits," he said.

planning almost a year ahead for a private expedition.
Finally I boarded a plane and flew away to India. Chandola met my plane, helping with all of the gear and arranged for a meeting with the required Liason officer and officials of the Indian Mountaineering foundation for a final briefing.
We then began the sixteen-hour drive to Manali where the expedition would start. Lush, green, rice paddies and those just planted formed an intriguing mosiac of watery mirrors reflecting snow-capped giants and idyllic villages as we drove through the Kulu Valley toward Manali.

For three days we mingled with them as we purchased our supplies, and then we were driven to the trail where our trek toward the mountain began. My leader was Lama Tashi, formerly a monk in Tibet, and now a well-known mountain guide. We were followed by eight porters and a goat. The landscape of rice paddies was left behind as well as the stress of travel and my world with its fast pace. They were replaced by memories of other mountains and the transcendental feeling the solitude of the wilderness brings.

The next day, we climbed an enormous landslide and then entered a cool, lush forest of conifer trees. Jagasukh Nala (stream) thundered by in a chasm below leaving behind clouds of rainbows. At times the path clutched ledges supported by logs spanning misty spaces. Splashes of blue iris and yellow strawberry blossoms filled sunlit places. The temporate forest gave way to alpine meadows where Gujars grazed their goats. Tents were set up near a flower bedecked alter paying tribute to Lord Shiva, aesthetic god of the bedecked alter paying tribute to Lord Shiva, aesthetic god of the

We moved on into a world of sparse vegetation. Dwarfed, bent junipers scattered among boulders carried on their won struggle with the harsh environment. Patches of snow grew larger and we entered a monochromatic world of snow, rock, ice and sky. Tents were like yellow microdots against the enormity of the mountains.

entered a monochromatic world of snow, rock, ice and sky. Tents were like yellow microdots against the enormity of the mountains. The fourth day, we climbed a steep snow covered ridge to a huge boulder perched on the precipice and set up base camp. Our kitchen was set up in a small cave under the boulder and from it, we looked down to the river winding through the snowy valley and on into the distant haze from which we had come. The cum ahead lead up into a world held in the snow grasp of winter. The most distant ridge swept upward to join the highest peak, Deo Tibba, as the late sun bathed the summit in a golden glaze. Directly across the cum from base damp, two waterfalls plunged several hundred feet down the gold and black geological folds of a sheer wall. Thirteen ibex defied gravity along the ledges of this spectacular stage.

The porters unloaded and returned to Manali the next day, while Lama Tashi, another guide and I ferried a load up to establish advance base camp near the base of Deo Tibba, returning to base camp. Early the following morning we loaded up the rest of the equipment we would need for a week and trekked toward the mountain, leaving the cook and Liason officer at base camp. Tents were set up as avalanches brought on by midday sun groaned, gave way, and thundered down the surrounding walls.

About midnight, I crawled from the tent into a night filled with stars pulsating brightly in the high thin atmosphere. Footsteps seemed extraordinarily loud in the brittle snow as I headed up a ridge. Feeling free from constraint, I moved upward, pausing occassionally to look back at the tents. They were so insignificant that the scene seemed devoid of the human element. Far down in the most distant valley a mountain range rose. Behind it, lightning flashed in a constant barrage. Translucent clouds began to drift up the valley toward Deo Tibba in strange flickering patterns. Deo Tibba's most distinguishing feature, a spiraling staircase of ice, was now silent. It seemed to have a blue interior illumina now silent. It seemed to have a blue interior illumination which lead right up into the stars. The moon rode the jagged crest near a place called The Pass of the Stone Towers. I already felt a special relationship with the mountain and was eager to be on it. Months later this solitary sojourn is the most clearly fixed memory of my expedition. Returning to the tent, I fell asleep while waiting for dawn.

expedition. Returning to the tent, I tell asleep while waiting for dawn.

"Om mani padme hum---im mane padme hum--" soft mumbled prayers that seemed to belong in a monastery accompanied by ringing bells and cymbols ended with "tea Memsahib?" Reaching into the early morning cold, I accepted the tea Lama Tashi offered, and within the hour we were moving in the direction of Dahengans Col which swept upward to join Deo Tibba.

A thrust of the ice-ax was followed by a kick of the crampons as we made our way slowly upward. With points grinding on the rock near the top, we made our way over the col and entered the brilliant pristine world of the Malana Glacier.

For the next three days, we climbed upward in unusually deep snow on steep pitches, crossing dark slits of crevasses on what looked most likely to hold. We passed under hanging glaciers and rested on airy perches, transfixed by the awesome beauty of the Himalayas. The intense sun made clumbing very dangerous by midday, so then, tents set up on iceshelves offered refuge. Afternoon brough billowing, drifting clouds which deepened the mystery of the walls and spires they caressed and enveloped. These afternoons were spent in the totally absorbing activity of painting.

I had chosen to come to the mountains with only the people of those mountains in order to relate more closely to the environment. I was never lonely even though neither Gokal or Lama Tashi spoke much English, for each day was rich and full of surprises as I absorbed the rhythm of the mountain. The visual rewards made the struggle seem inconsequential.

On the eleventh day of the expedition a shimmering band of tangerine glowed in the Eastern sky as we crawled from the tents into a very cold dawn. Putting on all of my gear in the high altitude seemed as difficult as tying my show when I was three years old.

We roped up as we neared a broad crevase and finally a low sun cast our long shadows across a route weaving around a jumble of seracs and slits in the glacier near the top of the ice fall. A hug across our route. As we made our way up over the dome's ice-cap an even more dazzling sun met us and ushered us to the summitt.

As the sun rose higher, we hurried back to camp two, but already the snow was too soft to descend down the most exposed part of the climb. The rest of the day was spent entertaining food fantasys between mild altitude headaches. It was not a comfortable night. I now slept with my boots, camera, and water bottle so that they would not freeze. How amazing it seemed that a few pounds of cloth with a zipper could make one feel secure in such an inhospitable

Before dawn, camp was broken and we began a long descent all the way back to base camp. The Liason Officer came to greet us as we crossed the river on the last days remnants of an icebridge. The feat seemed to take on some reality as I shouted, "We did it!"

That evening as we crouched by the stove in the small cave, Lama Tashi's face emerged from the shadlows like a face from a Rembrandt painting. How I wanted to know more about his life! I asked the Liason Officer to find out when and where he had crossed dever the Himplanus Carbon Statement and the fire as though init he over the Himalayas. Lama Tashi stared into the fire as though in it, he could see the past. He began to talk. He told of crossing a very high pass in November's bitter cold without proper boots. As the conversation continued, he spoke of life in Tibet. He was surprised to hear that I had visited Drepong Monastery two years before, where he had once been one of 10,000 monks living there before the Chinese took Tibet. We spoke of the beauty of Lhasa and of the majestic Patola Palace.

majestic Patola Palace.

After a while, we sat silently together, each in his own world. I was remembering golden gem encrusted Buddhas emerging from the shadows of Drepong just as Lama Tashi did there by the stove. Chinese guides had lead us through the haunting silence of the monastery and showed it as though it was a museum. Ancient frescos were peeling and fading as walls were falling to ruin.

The next day the monsoon closed around us, cloaking the mountains in gray. Snow appeared to be falling on the summit, erasing all signs of our trespass. We attempted to do the same at base camp. The porters returned and with everything feeling wet, we began a long days trek in the drizzle back to Manali.

Colors of summer were spreading up the mountain. Jagasukh Nala swollen by monsoon rain exploded over boulders sweeping along trees and branches. We struggled to stay upright on trails as slick as a long banana peel. Senses came alive as we entered the pungent forest. Boulders oozed from the cliffs above the landslide and pulses raced along with our feet as we bounded down the and pulses raced along with our feet as we bounded down the rubble to the other side.

Why Leftist 'Voice' Is Backing Mondale

Walter Mondale sounds a good deal more con-servative than Gary Hart in the Democratic cam-paign, especially in the area of foreign policy. But when you examine their ideas closely, there's hard-ly a dime's worth of difference between the two

Campbell Attends Symposium

Harry Campbell, Extension 4-H Specialist from Vernon, returned home this week from returned home this week from Chicago, Illinois, where he attended the 33rd annual 4-H Commodity Marketing Symposium, April 14-18. Campbell was one of 31 advisors and 40 4-H delegates from around the United States. He was accompanied by Texas State 4-H Winner, Gary Krueger of Hamilton.

The symposium, sponsored by the Chicago Board of Trade and arranged by the National 4-H Council in support of the 4-H Program of the Cooperative Extension Services, gave advisors and 4-H members a chance to personally experience commodity marketing. The chance to personally experience commodity marketing. The group learned about futures, contracts, pit trading, hedging, speculation, and international trade. They were also given a tour of the trading floor of the Board of Trade during the four day advertisingle wort.

Board of Trade during the four day educational event.

One of the highlights of the symposium was the chance for the 4-H members to actually go on the floor while trading was being done. It is the policy of the Board of Trade not to allow guests on the floor during trading hours with the exception. trading hours, with the exception of 4-H. To date, 4-H members who attend the 4-H Commodity Marketing Symposium, are the only group that has ever been allowed on the floor during a trading session

Another highlight of the event included the opportunity for 4-H'ers and advisors to participate in simulated pit trading on the Board of Trade floor. The group was taught the buy and sell hand signals, given marketing orders and allowed to trade with each other according to the rules of the Board of Trade.

One of the most exciting parts

One of the most exciting parts of the Symposium was the chance to visit personally with members of the Board of Trade during and following the recognition awards banquet. One or two board members was seated at each table with 4-H'ers and advisors to discuss the free seated at each table with 4-H'ers and advisors to discuss the free enterprise system, philosophy of the Board of Trade and answer any questions from the group.

Some of the night activities included sightseeing in downtown Chicago. The 4-H'ers and advisors particularly enjoyed the trip up to the skydeck of the Sears Tower, which is the tallest building in the world with the world's fastest elevators, 110 floors in less than 45 seconds.

campoen reported filer file trip is a fantastic experience for 4-H members and he would encourage any 4-H'ers interested in agricultural marketing to contact their country Extension agent about entering the 4-H Commodity Marketing

Preparing Beef Subject Of Show

A twelve-minute soundand-stide show has been produced by the Texas Cattle Feeders Association to help consumers learn how to be smarter beef shoppers and how to prepare various beef cuts.

Copies of the show will be distributed to county home demonstration agents throughout Texas as well as to other interested organizations, according to TCFA Communications Director Lee Wilcox.

He said the production, entitled "The Smart Beef Shopper," was photographed on location in the meat department of one of the state's largest supermarkets and in a typical home kitchen. It covers such subjects as meat labeling, grading and packaging as well as methods of cooking various beef cuts for best resulst.

Copies of the slide show are available for loan through TCFA, 5501 West I-40, Amarillo, Texas 79106.

The show was created by The

MOTLEY COUNTY TV TOWER (West of Town)

If you are wondering why you are not receiving Channel 7 on your set, it is due to the lack of funds to operate the receiving tower in Quitaque.

The people of our community who use and pay for this TV service are at a loss on how to operate the tower for themselves and everyone else. Everybody is in this TV business together. If we can not get enough collections in for maintainance and electricity, then everybody loses. Again our request is for evryone who is using the TV Tower, and not paying for this service, must do so on a regular basis.

Quitaque Tower receiving station has the same problems that we have here in Matador, the lack of funds. Collections must come in to keep this service to the community.

Boh Tinns who services and operates our

Bob Tipps, who services and operates our tower, has had to close two other U.H.F. towers in the Panhandle area due to lack of funds to "keep them going." DON'T LET THIS HAPPEN TO US!!!!!!
