

Local Peaks Witnessed Dramas In The Valley Of Tears

By Marisue Potts

Much of my life has been spent near the Caprock, Ceja of the Llano Estacado, or Eyebrow of the Staked Plains as it was called by the Comancheros. Within sight are three peaks of commanding size: Quitaque Peak, Old Flat Top and Eagle Point. The peaks, ever changing with the whims of the weather, sometimes appearing closer, sometimes bluer, sometimes taller, are surrounded by an aura of majesty and mystery.

Near the peaks we often made the descent from the plains to the foothills below, but the only legend relating to the peaks I heard in passing was one of bank robbers burying their loot on Old Flat Top. I remember the jokes about the meaning of the name "Quitaque" (horse manure in Indian language) but even as a child dismissed this as a slur from rivals of nearby towns.

Only when I became involved in the research for a possible historic marker for Daughters of the Republic of Texas, did I begin to understand the significance of these landmarks, the history of the valley they guarded, the dramas they have witnessed over the years.

The name Que-te-que appears in many early day abstracts, and as suggested by that spelling, was of Indian origin. It is believed that the Quitacas, a tribe of western Texas or eastern New Mexico, led Juan Mendoza on an expedition in 1683 from El Paso to this area, suggesting they were familiar with this territory.

In the 1800's the whole broad area from approximately Palo Duro Canyon on the north, to past present day Turkey on the east, to the head of the Pease River on the south, to present day Tullia on the west, was known as the Territory of Quitaque. Now only the town and creek are known by that name.

The Quitaque Territory, with its relatively mild climate, with breaks providing wood for fuel and protection from sudden plains storms and howling winds, with fresh pure water, nourishing grass, and abundant wildlife, was probably a haven known to many different groups of early man.

However, it was the warlike Kiowas and Comanches who controlled the valley in historic times, defending their stronghold against all invaders. The Texan-Santa Fe Expedition of 1841, trying to regain its strength to cross the uncharted plains on the way to liberate Santa Fe, felt the Kiowas' fury when some of the Texans were massacred as they searched for a way out of the valley for their wagon train. The Kiowas made off with so many of the Texans' horses that the creek was remembered as The American Horse Creek in their oral history.

The Expedition camped at the confluence of the Los Linguas and Quitaque creeks because of the good water which they had difficulty finding elsewhere in the area. They were weakened by the hardships of the difficult journey from Austin. They had traveled blindly most of the way, often without water, using mesquite beans for coffee, with no bread or vegetables.

To supplement their meager diet of stringy beef, they were reduced to eating anything they could catch (snakes, terrapins, prairie dogs) or anything they could gather (grapes, hackberries, cottonwood berries, plums, tree bark, mesquite beans).

There on the Quintufue, as it was called in some of the men's journals, the officers deliberated on whether to burn the wagons and retreat to Austin or divide the command, try to reach the Mexican settlements and send back help. Thereafter, this site was known as Camp Resolution as the men resolved to continue on to Santa Fe.

The strongest 100 men with the best remaining horses left with five days of provisions. After two weeks of wandering on the Llano, these men were captured by Mexican soldiers and force-marched to Mexico City where they were imprisoned.

Mexican guides, sent back by the first party, found the waiting men at Camp Resolution. They guided them to the foot of the Caprock near Arroyo Atuley, camping near Cottonwood Springs. They ascended about a mile south of the present day highway between Silverton and Quitaque.

Then they too were captured and sent on the long La Jornada del Muerte, or death march, to Mexico City, with many men dying of exhaustion or smallpox on the way. Of those that survived their harsh imprisonment, most were released by June of 1842 due to the diplomatic uproar the incident caused.

When the Comanches raided the frontier settlements in Texas and Mexico, they trailed many of the thousands of stolen horses back to the Quitaque area. Horses were the wealth of the Comanches, representing status and a means to barter. Some chiefs were said to possess as many as 3,000 horses personally. The Antelope Band of the Llano Estacado had 15,000 horses and 300 to 400 mules in the early 1800's.

The valley, with its wide vistas and high look out points, was a natural place to turn the horses loose, maintaining a relaxed watch over the grazing animals. Buffalo wintered nearby, providing meat and skins for the Indians, making this area an excellent campsite.

Later when the Comancheros established trade with the Indians, stolen cattle and captives, white or Mexican, were brought to the valley before being dispersed to New Mexico. According to Jose Tafoya, a known Comanchero, Quitaque became known as the primary Comanchero/Indian trading place.

To many, Linguish Falls with the water trickling over the rocky outcroppings is remembered as just a lovely, lonely, scenic picnic site, where it was necessary to sneak through the barbed wire fence and hike over the hill to reach the falls. Its Spanish name, however, suggests much more than a picnic area. Rio de las Linguas, River of the Tongues, describes the rendezvous of the many, varied ethnic groups and tribes that negotiated along its banks, often bartering with stolen goods or captives, speaking in many tongues or languages.

As Indians increased their raids on the frontier settlements, leaving death and destruction wherever they rode, many women and children were snatched from their families. (Men were often tortured, scalped, and usually killed.) Those who survived the initial harsh treatment of their captors, were sometimes brought to the valley.

Usually the white and Mexican women were kept for slaves, to be used by the tribe or to be bartered for trade goods to the Comancheros or other tribes. The families were separated amid much crying and wailing because the mothers realized they were likely never to see their children again. The New Mexican traders poignantly described the place as Valle de las Lagrimas, Valley of the Tears.

The children, if young enough, were often assimilated into the tribes, being highly prized by the child-poor Comanches and receiving comparatively good treatment from them. Cynthia Ann Parker spent some of her early captivity in the Quitaque Territory, probably around Los Linguas. She grew to love her wild Indian life and when freed, grieved over the Indian family she was forced to leave. Her brother John became a

Jailhouse Is Fascinating To Resident's Granddaughter

(Editor's Note: Ray Webb will be celebrating his 84th birthday March 12. This is an essay written by his granddaughter.)

A Statement Of The Nineteenth Century By Denise Webb

A place that I consider to be quite fascinating is my paternal grandparents' residence. Perhaps the word residence sounds like a cold term to use, but they did not live in a house. No, they resided in a jailhouse.

My grandfather was the jail deputy in the small town of Matador, Texas. The jailhouse was my grandparents' home during my entire childhood. I remember it well.

The jail house was built in 1891. The bricks used for its construction came from the same place the bricks used for the state capitol in Austin came from. It is older than the state capitol.

In Texas, it is the only jailhouse still standing that has a trap door used for hanging. Because of this fact, in 1976 it was declared a landmark. To me though, it is much more than a landmark! It is my grandparents' old house. I remember it well.

The bottom floor consisted of four rooms: the living room, the middle room, the kitchen, and the bathroom. I recall the sound of my footsteps as I walked in the front door. It sounded distinct to me because nowhere else I knew of had a linoleum covered floor. The living room contained a couch, two chairs and a single bed. The bed doubled as a place to seat company.

This room also had a television, a heater and a small table. It was comfortable. Many times the card table was set up, and dominoes were played while football was on the television.

The middle room was bigger. To the immediate left stood the refrigerator. To the right was the table where meals were served. At the far right was my grandparents' bed and dresser. Adjacent from the table was their chest of drawers.

What I remember the most vividly about this room is my grandmother's breakfasts! She used fresh country eggs. The

Independence Day For Texas Republic

By Senator John Tower

Plans already are well underway for the 1986 Texas Sesquicentennial -- the 150th anniversary of Texas Independence.

As this year's Texas Independence Day approaches on March 2, it will not only be a time to look forward to the coming celebration, but a moment for reflection into the past as well.

Many of the cherished traditions which are a major source of strength today for Texas took shape during the brief 10 years when it was an independent republic. When Texas became part of the United States, we brought these traditions with us along with our land and our people.

The first chapter in our proud history was written on March 2, 1836, when a band of brave and dedicated individuals signed the Texas Declaration of Independence. This document outlined their grievances against the government in Mexico City which had failed to abide by the national constitution. But it was more than a list of complaints. It was a statement of the values we continue to cherish -- trial by jury, public education, representative government, due process by law, freedom of religion and government by civil rather by military authorities.

Today, we face many problems as a nation, but we hold in our hands the tools we need to correct them. We are blessed with freedom and the means to preserve the values underscored in our state's Declaration of Independence.

And we have something else -- the same indomitable spirit of our forefathers. This spirit is exemplified by the garrison defending the Alamo. Its young commander, William Barret Travis, led this defense in such a way that it became one of the great holding actions in military history. In fact, though the Alamo was lost and the defenders perished, the time that Santa Anna's army was stalled during the siege gave Sam Houston time to put together forces which ultimately were victorious at the Battle of San Jacinto.

The courage and determination of the men at the Alamo is exemplified by this letter written by Travis "To the People of Texas and all Americans in the world:"

"I am besieged, by a thousand or more of the Mexicans under Santa Anna -- I have sustained continual Bombardment & cannonade for 24 hours & have not lost a man -- The enemy has demanded a surrender at discretion, otherwise, the garrison are to be put to the sword, if the fort is taken -- I have answered the demand with a cannon shot, & our flag still waves proudly from the walls -- I shall never surrender or retreat. Then, I call on you in the name of Liberty, of patriotism & everything dear to the American character, to come to our aid, with all despatch -- The enemy is receiving reinforcements daily & will no doubt increase to three or four thousand in four or five days. If this call is neglected, I am determined to sustain myself as long as possible & die like a soldier who never forgets what is due to his own honor & that of his country -- Victory or Death.

WILLIAM BARRET TRAVIS

The Battle of the Alamo has captured the imagination of people throughout the world as a symbol of dedication to freedom regardless of the personal cost. With this as our special heritage, we can be confident of our ability to face and overcome whatever crisis the future may hold.

Nine members participated in the lesson on putting last Thursday at Springs Ranch: La Voe, Louise, Leona, Lays, Mickey, Geneva, Pennie, Winifred and Hazel.

Robbie came and had golf books which she had made listing all our play days, etc. The books are most attractive, with appropriate sketches and decorations for all the months. A lot of time and work on making the books. Thanks Robbie! And Geneva won low putts (29). A most beautiful day for playing--just warm enough and no wind. Ideal days like that are few.

Helpful Hints

By Catherine Henderson

- 1) When you go deer hunting, try using a hearing aid. After you are settled down and in your hiding place, put on the hearing aid, turn it up. You can hear a squirrel or mouse running a block away. Be careful not to hurt your inner ear.
- 2) If you let a baby nurse a pacifier, he will fill his stomach with air. Do not carry your baby straddle of your hip. His bones are growing.
- 3) You can't get rid of a Japanese Beetle because he lets the red ants sting him until he smells like a red ant. Then the beetle goes into the ant hill and spends the winter with the ants.

4) If you are fishing for 50 or 75 pound blue catfish, go where there is still, deep, clear running water. Bait with rabbit liver or heart. Bait trout line, go to other side of river, lock the lines. Be real quiet. Leave line out overnight. A catfish is real shrewd. He also has long whiskers that are hollow. He smells the bait with his whiskers before taking the bait in his mouth. No boats near.

Letter To Editor

Dear Leon:

Recently our son, David, was involved in a serious automobile accident there in Matador, and several Paducah motorists were among the first to arrive at the scene of the accident. All of these Paducah residents have commented to us about how impressed they were with the ambulance service there in Matador.

The ambulance response time was minimal, but the thing that most impressed the Paducah motorists was the manner in which the ambulance attendants handled and took care of David and the other injured persons.

Having been involved in the operation of an ambulance service in the past, I am naturally aware that Matador has some excellent equipment and well-trained ambulance personell, but I was pleased that the Paducah folks noticed this and were impressed.

Matador's emergency services, namely fire department and ambulance service, are far superior to what most rural communities have to offer, and Matador should be proud of this. Some things such as this we tend to take for granted until some of our own family is involved.

These folks deserve our special thanks for a job well done.

Sincerely,
Pat and Ann Seigler

Quitaque Peaks Witness Dramas

fearsome and cruel warrior on the Mexico-Texas border, showing no mercy for his own race.

When Col. Ranald Mackenzie received orders to pursue and subdue the Indian menace, he led his men along the caprock seeking the enemy. In the Quitaque territory in 1872 he camped on the Middle Pease headwaters, and three times on the Quitaque Creek. Jim Stroup, the second white child born in Briscoe County who grew up on the Quitaque Creek, has found cavalry artifacts over the years, evidence of these campsites.

After the valley was swept free of the buffalo by the buffalo hunters and of the Indians by Mackenzie's persistent hounding, New Mexicans moved in with their sheep herds which they fattened for the New Mexico market.

Jose Tafoya established a trading post. Other Mexicans built dwellings into the sides of the bluffs and dugouts into the sides of the hills. In some small canyons remnants of stone fences the pastores built to contain their herds are found.

A canal, still visible to the first white settlers, was built for irrigation of crops and trees. A flood in 1893 swept away the canal and other vestiges of the New Mexican era; but an archaeological survey in 1972 on the Merrell ranch produced, among other things: a rifle, rifle barrels, a revolver, a coffee pot, bridle bits, and pieces from carretas, the traditional Mexican ox-cart.

All this is hard to believe now as one drives through the pastoral valley with its freshly plowed red soil, contrasted by the blue tinged peaks and foothills, silhouetted on the horizon. But can one pass Cottonwood Springs without thinking of the Texan-Santa Fe Expedition camping there before being led onto the plains to their capture?

Can one drive through the breaks without thinking of the hungry men who wandered away from camp to gather mesquite beans or plums, never to be heard of again? Can one forget that just over a nearby ridge Kiowa warriors cut out a soldier's heart, scalping and mutilating him? Or that thousands of horses or buffalo or cattle grazed where cotton and peanuts now grow? Or that mothers and their children were torn apart, amid their piteous wailing, never to see each other again?

On a bright winter's night lit by a Comanche moon, the Peaks replay it all in one's imagination.

County Agent's Corner

By Ray Minkley

Farmers and ranchers concerned about high taxes eroding their estates will want to take advantage of a special seminar on estate planning coming up. Conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service of the Texas A&M University System, the seminar is slated for March 27-28, Holiday Inn, 801 Ave. Q, Lubbock.

Each day's program is from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Discussions will center on new estate tax rules, basic estate planning devices, and special planning tools and estate tax rules for agriculture.

SPRINGTIME PROPAGANDA

Homeowners and gardeners should prepare for a deluge of springtime propaganda. Every spring brings ads depicting fabulous plants of untold beauty and rapid growth, miracle topsoils or magic growth promoting substances, and the wondrous potential of rather common and nondescript plants, bulbs and seeds.

Untold thousands are being gypped out of millions of dollars annually by these shysters with their nationwide advertisements. With this year's particularly hard winter, homeowners and gardeners will be repairing damaged landscapes and will be even more susceptible to promoters with hit-and-run items or services. So be careful!

WEED CONTROL

Early March is the target date for two big weed control jobs. First, don't let winter weeds stay in lawns or any other turf area past early March. Chemicals like Roundup, Kleenup or Doomsday can be used. If these weeds are left they may offer serious competition to our lawns as they try to come back from winter dormancy. The second job is to apply a pre-emergent herbicide especially if the turf has a history of sandbur, crabgrass, goosegrass, etc. Some to consider are Balan, Betasan, Dacthal, Devrinal or Ronstar. Please read the label and follow the directions for any of these chemicals.

GOLDEN HAMMER AWARD-In recognition of his 50 years in the lumber and hardware business, John Meason (second from right), Higginbotham Bartlett district manager in Plainview, receives the Estwing Golden Hammer Award from Galbraith Steel and Supply Co. representatives. Meason was manager of the lumber yard in Roaring Springs from 1933 to 1968. Making the presentation are Richard Adams, A.C. White and Ned Phillips.

Northfield Home Demo Club Meets

The Northfield Home Demonstration Club met Tuesday, February 28, in the home of Mrs. Billy Paul Simpson for their monthly meeting.

Mary Streit, County Extension Agent, brought the program on Omelet and Crepe Cookery.

After the program, a business meeting was called to order to elect officers for the 1984 year. Officers elected were President, Mrs. David Boykin; Vice President, Mrs. Billy Paul Simpson; Secretary/Treasurer, Mrs. Franklin Jameson; Reporter, Mrs. James Timmons; and TEHA Delegate, Mrs. Billy Paul Simpson.

Other members present were Mmes. Delmont Hays, E.M. Timmons, W.J. Boykin, and Sid McFall.

EMT Association Has Meeting

By Doug Meador - Reporter

The Motley County EMT Association held a regular meeting Thursday, March 1, at the Matador Fire Station.

President Mary Renfro called the meeting to order at 7:30 p.m. There was no old business to be discussed. New business included a review of the traffic accident on Feb. 18.

President Renfro informed the association that the hospital board has agreed to buy the working EMT's coveralls to be worn during ambulance runs. The association chose navy blue coveralls. The group voted on and passed a motion to buy patches and badges with "MOTLEY COUNTY E.M.S." The association felt this would make services look more professional.

President Renfro reported to the group that labeling of the ambulance compartments was near completion. It was decided by the association to have a check list of maintenance and supplies to be completed each week.

A code of ethics was passed out for the EMTs to study and make suggestions or corrections for at their next meeting, March 20th.

Jailhouse Holds Memories

yolks in those eggs were a rich amber color. Her sausage and homemade biscuits were delicious! She was an angel and she cooked like one too!

The next room was the kitchen. It was small and, at the most, functional. It had a door that led out to the side of the building. The best thing about the kitchen that I can remember is my grandmother's presence.

The bathroom had three doors in it. One of the doors was wood and the other two were steel. The wood door was approximately three and one half feet tall. It opened into a small space that was used for a closet. One steel door was from the kitchen. Since the prisoners took baths in this bathroom, the door had a small door, which was the size of a window, in it. On the side of the bathroom door inside the bathroom was what looked like one half of a circular birdcage. It was around the space where the smaller door opened. The purpose of this was to protect the jailer.

When the prisoner indicated that he was ready to go upstairs, the jailer could first look in to make certain that the prisoner was on the opposite side of the bathroom before he opened the door. The other steel door went to the steps leading up to the jail.

The main point of interest within the bathroom was the big bathtub. It stood on four iron legs, was made of iron, and was covered with porcelain.

The top of the stairs ended on a fair sized landing. To the right was a cell for women. Around to the left were the men's cells. The first barred door opened into a "walk around." This "walk around" was a small aisle encircling all of the men's cells. A second locked door led to the three cells. Each individual cell could be locked. Within the second door is a small area where the prisoners can be together. I do not remember the actual jail very clearly. We, my cousins and I, were very rarely allowed upstairs and we were never allowed to go upstairs when the jail was occupied!

The feelings I got from the first floor and the second floor are a perfect example of contrast. The bottom floor was filled with life, love, and laughter. The emphasis was on family and togetherness. The jail, however, was ominous and silent. Condemnation and separation existed there. It was cold.

MUSIC FROM LITTLE DARLINGS- How often does Matador have a band march down Main Street in a parade? It happened Tuesday morning when "The One and Only Geniune Original Playschool Band" came marching in. Pictured are Holly Tippin, Rebecca Tippin, Leslie Minkley, Alana Bingham and Jill Stanley. The little mascot is blacky. This group meets weekly and mothers rotate as teachers. Also in the group (not pictured) are Dowell Garrison, Scotty Scott, Bo Speed, Leal Cruse and Jody Kilmer. Their band leader is Patsy Tippin.
