PRICE TEN CENTS

TRAIL DUST

By DOUGLAS MEADOR

The efficiency of horse-drawn vehicles, buggies and wagons, in no way compared with motorized transportation, but the initial investments and maintenance were less. A box (flat can) of axle grease usually sold for 25 cents and would last a year with normal use. It was the custom to keep an extra box of axle lubricant under the buggy seat, in the shallow slatted compartment that also had room for the buggy wrench, that fit the taps on the axels. To grease a wagon or buggy, it was necessary to loosen the taps, slide the wheel out as far as safety would permit, then apply the grease with a flat stick, return the wheel to its normal position and replace the tap. Threads on axels were cut so they would not loosen when the vehicle was going forward. The wagon tap wrench handle also served as a pin to hold the double-tree to the wagon tongue.

It is ironic that stupid people are often more interesting than those who follow the pattern of doing the logical and to be expected thing. It is not always a moral separation in personalities, but rather, one of courage and adventure that is manifest in stepping beyond the conventional.

The temperature of affection may be so well controlled that it remains static in the presence of an observer but fluctuates madly in the laboratory of solitude.

Fire on Highway Destroys Trailer

Fire of unknown origin, destroyed a small metal utility trailer on State Highway 70, about two miles south of Matador late Thursday night.

The trailer was being towed by Tom Wilson, an oilfield worker, formerly of Artesia, N.M., en route to Wilson, Okla.

He was accompanied by his wife and baby when he looked back and saw the vehicle in flames. He hastily detached the trailer from his automobile, then tried to open the right hand metal door. He was met by a wall of flame. The Matador Volunteer Fire Department answered the call, but there was little the department could do when it arrived.

BACTERIA BELIEVED OIL SLICKS ANSWER

AUSTIN, Texas (Spl.) - Developing bacteria that can gobble up oil slicks is the focus of an important research project being conducted by a University of Texas scientist.

Dr. Carl Oppenheimer, director of UT's Institute of Marine Science at Port Aransas, is readying the first field test (in a 200-acre pond near Corpus Christi) for his project which has already proved successful in laboratory tests.

Dr. Oppenheimer's lab tests have showed that once bacteria chew up the oil, they die, leaving end products which have no harmful effects on existing marine environment.

Families falling within these scales or those suffering from unusual circumstances or hardships are urged to apply for free or reduced price lunches for their children. They may do so by filling in the application forms sent home in a letter to parents. Additional copies are available at the principal's office in each school. Applications may be submitted any time during the school year. The form itself is simple to complete and requests information needed to determine economic need based on the income and number of persons in the family and any unusual circumstances or hardships which affect the family's ability to pay for school lunches. The information provided on the application will be confidential and will be used only for the purpose of determining eligibility. Under the provisions of the policy the Superintendents of each school will review applications and determine eligibility. If a parent is dissatisfied with the ruling of the local official he may make a request either orally or in writing for a hearing to appeal the decision, to the president of each school board.

The policy also provides that there will be no identification of or discrimination against any student unable to pay the full cost of a lunch.

A complete copy of the policy is on file in each school and in the office of the superintendents of each school where it may be reviewed by any interested patron.

Grid Boss Thinks Matador May Repeat

MATADOR — Stan Irvine, a young, outspoken football coach, doesn't let much stand in the way of a good, or funny, story. Irvine, who last year as much predicted a district championship for long-downtrodden Matador, called it perfectly.

"We'd be less likely to win this thing for the second year in a row, but it's always possible," said Irvine. "To be completely honest, I think it's possible."

Always Expect To Win

"Our boys are from the old school. They always expect to win. I do not think this attitude existed a few years ago. People look at us, our size, and say, 'those boys are not future champions.' But, don't forget, that's the same thing they said last year."

Bill Barnhill, who Irvine tabs an all-state candidate, will be the same thing they said last year.

"Barnhill should be the best Class B quarterback in this part of Texas, and maybe, the whole state, for that matter. But, he is also a good defensive player," said Irvine. "As a secondary performer, he is probably as good, or better, than he is at quarterback."

In 1970, Barnhill led a relatively inexperienced team to the District 3-B title and an overall 7-4 record.

"We lost six all-district performers," the coach lamented. "We have only seven lettermen returning, but if some of our younger kids improve, we should do all right.

"We will not be a pushover. We have determination and pride. The boys are thinking about another championship. Who is going to argue with them?"

"Now, we do have a long way to go, but the kids have a lot of pride and enthusiasm. Barnhill, undoubtedly, is our big plus."

Irvine greeted 25 candidates at the start of two-a-days, an increase of 19 since he took over the program three years ago, when the team went 3-6.

Just Give Best

"We just want our people to give their best," said Irvine. "If we win, fine; if we don't, all right. They do their best for the team, not for themselves. Why I've got a kid who'll bang his head into the goal post if he thinks it will help us win."

Other seniors, joining Barnhill and expected to carry their share of the load as returning starters, are Bobby Simpson, Andy Green, Gerald Jackson and Dwayne Campbell. In the key position change, Simpson has been moved from center to a backfield slot.

Hal Martin, a junior letterman, and sophomore letter winner Thomas Tilson, a 6-foot, 200-pounder, are the other returnees.

Speed Good

"Our speed could be good," the coach said. "David Lee, right now, is our fastest kid. He runs the 100 in about 10.2. He looks good, but we have one problem: He's never played football before."

Smitty Smith, who two years ago transferred from Childress, is expected to see considerable action at either tight end or fullback.

"All of our returning starters are above-average Class B boys," said Irvine. "Plus, we feel we have boys who can do a respectful job."

Irvine points to Lazbuddie and Anton as the top choice in the 3-B race, and "the rest of us can probably be thrown together."

COUNTY AGENT PALLMEYER SAYS:

Many livestock producers were faced with a forced sale of breeding livestock during the drought. This may be referred to as an "involuntary conversion" for tax purposes. The following items are important factors to remember about this type of sale.

If a loss results from the sale, it is deductible in the year of the sale.

If a gain results from the sale, the producer may elect to postpone the tax on such gain if the proceeds from such sale is used to purchase replacement livestock within two years.

The number of breeding livestock sold above the number normally sold is the only animals which qualify. For example, assume a rancher has a 100 cow herd and normally sells 10 old cows each year. This year he sells 50 head for $175. Forty head would be considered as "involuntary conversion."

If the cows were originally purchased and he had an undepreciated cost basis of $100 per head he would have a gain per head of $75. For tax purposes, the gain on 10 head of $750 (10 x $75) would be treated as capital gain as usual. The gain from drought sales, considered to be an involuntary conversion, would be $3000 (40 x $75). The tax on the $3000 could be postponed.

If the cows were raised they would have a zero cost basis, therefore the gain would be much greater. The 10 head normally sold would have $1750 subject to capital gain. The remaining 40 head sold due to the drought would result in a gain of $7000. The tax on the $7000 could be postponed.

If a producer postpones reporting his gain he must file the following information with his tax return in the year of the sale: (a) Evidence that the drought exists—a statement made by the taxpayer will be sufficient since the drought is common knowledge and widespread. (b) Number and kind of livestock sold this year and in a normal year. (c) Computation of gain.

In the year the replacements are purchased the following information should be filed with the tax return: (a) Date replacements were purchased (b) Number and kind of replacements. (c) Cost of replacements.

The replacements must be purchased within two years following the close of the tax year in which the gain occurred. An extension can be obtained from IRS if more time is needed.

Additional information on the tax treatment of livestock may be obtained from the nearest Internal Revenue Service office, your tax consultant, or my office.

IT IS SUGGESTED THAT LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS WHO ARE AFFECTED KEEP THIS ARTICLE.

A new system of labeling is now appearing on light bulbs to help you choose the best bulb for the job.

The key words in the system required by the Federal Trade Commission are watts, lumens and bulb life.

The term "watts" will remain stamped on light bulbs to indicate the measure of power needed to operate the bulb. Watts does not necessarily mean how much light the bulb will give off, but that a 100-watt bulb operated for 10 hours will use 1000 watt-hours of power or a kilowatt-hour.

Wattage is important information because many light fixtures have a limited watt level for safe usage. You usually see this information stamped inside the light fixture.

"Lumen" measures light output. Higher lumens means brighter light.

"Bulb life" measures average hours a bulb generally operates before burning out. Conditions of use — such as improperly designed fixtures, excessive supply of voltage, excessive fixture vibration, rough handling, loosely screwed-in bulbs and defective or overloaded wiring — can reduce the rated life of the bulb.

In choosing bulbs, consider three basic areas. If you require brightness for close work such as reading, sewing or studying, consider the standard bulb. They have a brighter light, but shorter life.

If you require convenience for hard-to-reach locations, such as a stairway light or a fixture needing removal and cleaning, consider the long life bulb. When you buy a long life bulb of the same wattage to replace a standard bulb, you will get less light.

If you require both brightness and long life, consider a long life bulb of the next higher wattage to replace the standard bulb. Generally, a long life bulb of the next higher wattage will give at least as much light as the standard bulb being replaced. Since you are increasing wattage, your electricity costs will be increased.

Three-way bulbs deserve special mention because they contain filaments — one for low brightness and one for medium brightness. Both filaments are combined to obtain high brightness. For example, a 50-100-150 watt three-way bulb shows three lumen ratings: 50 watt, low brightness; 100 watt, medium brightness; and 150 watt, high brightness.

The bulb life of three-way bulbs will ordinarily be given as "average hours" (based on the filament burning out first in the laboratory tests) or three different "average hours" (one average life for each brightness level, for each filament, and for both filaments burning).

One important point is that the failure to screw three-way bulbs into the socket properly is one cause for fast burn-out. Three-way bulbs should be screwed firmly into the socket, but not forced as improper insertion results in faulty electrical contact. Failure to seat the bulb properly can result in only one filament lighting.

Tech Ranch Museum Gets Spur Granary

LUBBOCK — Acquisition of a cleverly designed granary from the historic Spur Ranch in Dickens county for the Ranch Headquarters museum project at Texas Tech is among major attractions. The granary was the seventh historic structure to be donated to the Ranch Headquarters, where some 20 historic buildings are assembled into an outdoor living museum that will preserve and interpret the history of ranching in the American west.

The Spur brand, long famous among ranch historians, started as a road brand, used on a herd of J. M. Hall's cattle being moved from northeastern New Mexico to the Middle Pease River of Texas during 1879.

In 1883 the brand passed into the hands of the Espuela (Spanish for Spur) Cattle Company, under A. M. Britton and S. W. Loomax, who had in the same year sold the Matador Ranch to Scottish investors. Britton and Loomax purchased over 240,000 acres in Kent, Dickens, Garza, and Crosby counties. Leased school lands finally brought the fenced total of the Spur Ranch to over 569,000 acres.

In December, 1884, the Spur went the way of the Matador and was purchased by foreign investors, becoming the Espuela Land and Cattle Company, Limited, of London. During its 22 years of English ownership, the ranch was managed by Loomax, Fred Horsbaugh, and Henry H. Johnstone.

Purchased By Swensons
The history of the ranch took a new turn when it was purchased by the well-known Swenson family. In 1907 ownership was taken by the Spur Syndicate, a combination of interests between S. A. Swenson, E. P. Swenson, and John Emery.

The Syndicate's primary aim was settlement and development, and it quickly began to sell its arable lands to settlers. During the first six months, 16,000 head of cattle were sold to make room for farmers, and again in 1910, 17,000 head were sold in order to vacate more land.

Charles Adam Jones, a purchasing agent for the Armour Packing Co. in Kansas City, became manager of the Spur in 1907. When, in 1913, he moved to Freeport, Texas, to manage the Swenson's sulphur interests, management of the Spur was assumed by his son, Clifford B. Jones. Dr. Jones remained as manager for 20 years, and in 1933 he became the second president of Texas Technological College in Lubbock.

During Dr. Jones' tenure as manager, the Spur name was permanently recorded in the world of science. In 1920, Professor E. C. Case, paleontologist for the University of Michigan, found the remains of an unknown species of an 18-foot prehistoric reptile. He named his discovery "desmatosuchus spurensis," after the Spur Ranch. Remains of many prehistoric elephants have also been found on the Spur.

Ownership Is Divided

In 1941, the parties to the Spur Syndicate divided ownership of their surface land interests. When, in 1946, a further division was carried out, A. C. Swenson became owner of the Spur Headquarters ranch. Since that time the Spur has lived up to its reputation for pioneering and innovation.

Under the management of A. C. Swenson's son-in-law, O. J. Barron, Jr., the ranch has been converted into a fully integrated system of cattle raising. Farming Barron considers the balance between 12,000 acres of grazing land, 200 acres of dry-land farming, and 500 acres of irrigated farm land to be "just right" for his purposes. The Spur now maintains its own feed lots, marketing fat calves directly to the packer, rather than following the more general practice of marketing feeder calves to other feed lots.

In 1964, Barron began crossing his Hereford-Angus cows with dairy bulls such as Brown Swiss and Holstein, in an effort to produce a more efficient feeder calf. His success is evident in the growing number of beef producers who now follow this practice.

Built About 1900

The granary was built about 1900 by someone who had an eye for saving labor. It is situated on an embankment several feet above the adjacent stalls and horse corals. Wooden chutes lead from the floor of the granary down to a grain box at the level of the stalls. With this arrangement, the chore boy responsible for feeding the horses had cracked corn delivered to him by gravity force, saving several steps and a great deal of carrying. Eventually, visitors to the Ranch Headquarters museum will be able to see this system in operation.

"The building is still quite serviceable," said Barron, "and we could make good use of it here on the ranch. But its historical value, especially when brought together with other buildings in the Ranch Headquarters project, cannot be measured in dollars and cents. We are pleased that it will be preserved and used for museum purposes."

The historical records of the Swenson ranching operation have recently been donated to Texas Tech's Southwest Collection, an important and rapidly growing archival center used by scholars researching in a wide variety of fields relating to the American Southwest.

The donation of the granary, made jointly by A. C. Swenson and Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Barron, Jr., will assure that the historic Spur Ranch is also represented in the Ranch Headquarters project.

Scotland has been called the Land of Cakes due to its oatmeal cakes.

PANHANDLE-SOUTH PLAINS FAIR BILLS HEADLINE ATTRACTIONS

LUBBOCK (Special) — The box office opened at Fair Park Coliseum Thursday, to launch ticket sales for headline attractions of the 54th annual Panhandle South Plains Fair, finance director Earl Kerr said.

The fair this year will be returning Tennessee Ernie Ford, comedian-singer Glenn Ash and The Celebration on the three opening days of the exposition, slated Sept. 27 — Oct. 2.

On Thursday, an all-star Mexican variety show will be presented, featuring singer Lucha Villa and recording star Jose Alfredo Jimenez and the Guadalajaras, a mariachi group.

Closing out the weekling run on Friday and Saturday will be a country and western spectacular featuring Merle Haggard, his wife Bonnie Owens and The Strangers.

Ash is no stranger to Texas. Born in Cincinnati, he joined the Air Force and was a drill instructor at Lackland AFB near San Antonio. He has appeared locally before.

From Lubbock to Saigon

Glenn was working at a night club here when comedian Jonathan Winters — also in the city for an engagement — saw him and asked him to go on a tour of Vietnam. Less than a week later he was in Saigon.

Ash also has an impressive musical background, starting with country-western into rock.

More than $38,000 in premiums are being offered exhibitors in this year's fair.

Tickets are priced at $2.50, $3.50 and $4.50 for all three segments. Show times are 5:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. daily. Tickets purchased prior to the fair opening will include a free gate admission pass. Mrs. Betty Putman will handle ticket sales.

In addition to the coliseum box office, tickets also will be available at four other locations in Lubbock.

operations have been increased and more ensilage is produced in order to insure an adequate feed supply during time of drought.
