Golden Anniversary Is Observed By Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Dobbins

Friends and relatives gathered at the Northfield Community building Saturday, July 19, to observe the Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. (Jim) Dobbins, long-time residents of the county.

In the receiving line with the couple were their son and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Odell Dobbins of Midland, and their daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Rogers of Amarillo.

Assisting with hospitalities were granddaughters of the couple, Patty Dobbins of Midland, Adele Dobbins of Richardson and Sue De Nell Rogers of Amarillo. Other grandchildren present were Vance, Lance and Bryan Rogers of Amarillo and Mr. and Mrs. Jim Garland of Killeen. One great-grandson was also present.

Guests were registered by Adele Dobbins and Sue Rogers, who also presided at the punch service during the reception.

At the registration table was an open, miniature Bible inscribed with "Jim and Sue, 1919-1969," and the words, "Rock of Ages."

The table from which the punch was served was covered with a white cloth and featured the crystal punch service containing golden punch, nuts and mints.

A formal refreshment table was laid with an ecru cutwork cloth, underlaid with a gold cover and held an arrangement of long-stemmed, hand-painted gold roses in a white vase at one end. At the opposite end was a two-layer rectangular wedding cake decorated with white roses and gold leaves and topped with an arch of plastic entwined with white and gold roses and lilies of the valley. White bells centered the arch.

COUNTY AGENT PALLMEYER SAYS:

The beef cattle industry has enjoyed a tremendous increase in the consumption of beef, due in part to selection programs being employed by more and more breeders, says Dr. Frank A. Orts, Extension meats specialist at Texas A&M University.

Consumers are asking for and getting more muscular beef cuts along with more quality. Quality of lean and quantity of lean are not antagonistic, so a breeder can select for these two attributes at the same time.

Marbling, which is a measure of beef palatability and tenderness, muscling, fat covering on the outside of the carcass and fast gaining animals, are highly heritable. Therefore, all of these economically important beef carcass traits can be used in a selection program. But a breeder must also include in his selection program percent calf crop, weaning weight and feed efficiency in order to produce cattle economically, Orts says.

A breeder should secure carcass evaluation data on at least 15 steers or heifers from each sire to determine what type of carcasses his cattle are producing. This may be accomplished by enlisting in the various breed association carcass evaluation programs which offer a carcass evaluation service. A limited number of carcasses can be evaluated by Extension personnel.

Before deciding what ration to feed in a creep feeder, the producer should determine what he wants to accomplish.

Some producers creep feed calves primarily to improve finish; others want rapid growth and some are interested only in maintaining normal growth and development.

When creep feeding is a regular practice, the feed should be put in the creep when the older calves are about three weeks old. If the creep is located on or near the feed ground, water or shade where the cattle gather nearby, the calves usually start eating with little trouble.

Getting older calves to eat in a creep may be more of a problem. The following suggestions may help:

1. Build the creep feeder before the calving period starts and allow the cows to enter the creep until you are ready to start feeding the calves.
2. Confine an animal that knows how to eat inside the creep to serve as a decoy to younger calves.
3. Teach a few of the older calves to eat and the younger calves will follow.
4. Scatter cake or hay near the creep and more of it inside the pen to coax the calves to enter. Once inside, they should find the feed. Fresh clean feed in this early period is essential.

There has been a dramatic shift in the slaughter of cattle and calves in Texas during the last few years. This change has been stimulated by several factors, among which the following are foremost:

1. A tremendous increase in demand for feeder calves by feedlots producing heavy fed beef.
  2. Rising incomes of consumers particularly in the South and an increased preference for "beef" rather than "slaughter calf."
- With these two overall effects simultaneously acting on the market, the retail food stores have found less slaughter calf available for purchase and at higher prices.

During the first four months of 1969, for example, Texas commercial slaughter of calves was down 22% from the same period a year ago. These months also recorded the smallest slaughter of calves on record in the state.

Another interesting aspect of this change in slaughter classification is the average weights of animals slaughtered. Average liveweight of calves commercially slaughtered in the first four months of this year ranged between 493 and 528 pounds, while the lowest weight recorded during this season of the year since 1960 was 516 pounds.

A 30-year experiment at Texas A&M University has demonstrated that farmers and ranchers would do well to determine the amount of zinc coating on wire if they are interested in more permanent fencing.

Results of the trial brought a conclusion that was suspected all along: The more zinc or galvanizing coating on a wire, the longer it will resist rusting.

But Project Leader Lambert Wilkes of the A&M Agricultural Engineering Department said sometimes questions with seemingly obvious answers have a strange way of backfiring.

For example, it was once thought that steel fence posts would easily outlast wooden posts. Yet, another long term experiment at A&M has shown that good quality wooden posts will do a better job than steel in high rainfall regions or in industrial areas when fumes cause corrosion.

The 30-year fence wire testing actually had several goals. These were to tabulate information on materials generally used in farm fencing and help set up national standards for fence wire to give consumers a reliable buying guide.

A&M's Agricultural Experiment Station cooperated with the American Society of Testing Materials. College Station was one of 12 sites with a variety of conditions throughout the United States.

Wilkes says results should prove valuable to wire manufacturers as well as farmers and ranchers. Here are some of the questions that have been answered:

What is the relation between zinc coating weight and service life? Does method of zinc application (electroplating and hot dip galvanizing) affect service life? Does wire diameter affect the life of the zinc coating? What is the service life of wire after the zinc has weathered off?

In test results, thickness of the zinc coatings was expressed as weight in ounces per square foot of surface area of the base metal. The College Station test showed that all wires with less than 0.3 ounces of zinc began rusting within an average of 7.8 years and were completely corroded in 12.9 years. Wires coated with 0.35 ounces began rusting in 10.8 years and were entirely rust-covered in 17 years.

After 20 years of exposure, wires with less than 0.8 ounces had begun to rust or were completely rusted. All samples above 0.8 showed no sign of deterioration.

By the end of 30 years, only the wires having 1.6 ounces of zinc or more were free of rust. Wilkes said that once the coating broke down, corrosion rate was similar to that of unprotected metal.

Rusting was less in all cases with electroplated wire compared with other application processes. Corrosion rates were independent of the base metal wire diameter. Wilkes recommended that farmers and ranchers in East Texas and along the Gulf Coast buy the heavier coated wire for permanent fencing such as along highways and property boundary lines. But in West Texas with its sparse rainfall, the lighter zinc coated wire should be entirely satisfactory and less expensive.

The most critical time for newly planted trees and shrubs is during the first summer. Because of the reduced root system, many plants have difficulty getting established, especially in areas where rainfall has been abundant, then suddenly it turns hot and dry before the roots are well established. Rather than frequent light watering, give the plants a thorough soaking to a depth of 8-12 inches. Allow the soil to dry in the upper two inches before watering again. A mulch over the root area will aid in moisture conservation and keeping soil temperature down.

Screwworms are on the prowl in Texas. Case numbers are already higher than last year and a statewide campaign has been launched to combat the threat of a major outbreak by this livestock pest.

Do bees dance?

Dancing bees communicate to their hive mates the direction and location of food. The bees in the hive follow and imitate the dancing bees and correctly interpret the signals that are given, even if the dances are done in complete darkness. If the dancing bee does a round dance (A), then the other bees fly out to find food near the hive. If the bee does a wagging dance, it means that the food is more than 100 yards away. But the wagging dance also tells in what direction and how far away the feeding place lies. If the straight run is upward (B), the direction is toward the sun. A straight run downward (C) means food is away from the sun. The speed of the wagging dance indicates the distance of the food from the hive.

How old is baseball?

A game with bases, and sometimes called "base ball," was played long ago as part of the religious rites of the ancient Egyptians. Baseball as we know it began in 1845, when Alexander J. Cartwright drew up some rules for the game. He helped to organize the first baseball club, the New York Knickerbockers. In 1846 the Knickerbockers lost the first recorded game to the rival New York Nine, 23 to 1, in four innings.

Where are the biggest caves in North America?

The Carlsbad Caverns are the biggest caves in North America, if not in the world. They were discovered in 1901 by Jim White, a New Mexican cowboy. About 60,000,000 (million) years ago, acid rain-water began nibbling away at the limestone bed in New Mexico to form rooms that are as long as 1/2 mile and as high as a 30-story office building. Some of the rooms in Carlsbad are 1,000 feet or so under the ground. The cave's largest room could hold 10 football fields.

Where did the phrase "not worth his salt" originate?

The phrase "not worth his salt" probably became a saying in ancient Greece during the time when slaves were bought with salt. The word "salary" comes from the Latin word sal, meaning "salt." The Romans often paid their troops in salt instead of money.

Richard Campbell On Center Stage

by Jim Gintonio
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal
Sports Staff

ARLINGTON — The first thing you notice about Richard Campbell is the beautiful blonde standing at his left.

Then, your eyes wander to the alluring redhead standing at his right.

And, Texas Tech's All-Southwest Conference defensive end doesn't seem too unhappy about the situation; he's smiling, anyway.

It's not Coach J. T. King's off-season program of R&R or Campbell presenting a 'swinger' image, but merely the Tech star doing his 'thing' — and, doing it with creatures such as these.

Campbell is the featured singer at the Crazy Horse Saloon, one of the biggest attractions at Six Flags Over Texas.

With his female friends and the odd assortment of others on stage, such as a skinny tapdancer and an over-weight piano player, Campbell is still among the best in this league.

Instead of grabbing ballcarriers, Campbell captures the hearts of old ladies and little girls in his role as a returning letterman for the Six Flags league.

Campbell, who sings tenor according to press releases, nonetheless sounds like a young Robert Goulet.

Last year, Campbell played the role of Julius Caesar in "TV-BC," a musical comedy, spoofing the early Roman days.

The show was performed 400 times for over 800,000 people.

"All of us are very proud of Richard," said publicity director Larry Mayran. "He's not only a superb singer and performer, but also has outstanding leadership qualities."

At the Crazy Horse Saloon, Campbell puts on eight shows daily before large audiences.

The Red Raider image doesn't escape Campbell, even 300-odd miles from home. All the performers are decked in white shirts, red bowties and black and red vests.

Each show lasts approximately 30 minutes. The performance opens with the overweight piano player running across the stage. He flops down on the piano stool and bangs the keys. The lights dimmed. The people clapped. A little girl in the corner cried.

The six performers rush on stage, immediately going into a song-and-dance routine.

Although the others are going twice as fast as Campbell, spinning twice, while Richard's going once, he still commands most of the attention; either he's bigger or he sings louder.

Following the routine, Campbell gets the first crack at the audience. He introduces his two female friends, the overweight piano player, the skinny tapdancer and two more singers, a shaggy-haired one and a stocky one.

Richard's solo number, "When I Fall In Love," goes well, naturally, but he adds that little extra.

Midway through the song, he walked off stage. He knelt near a table and finished the number with one arm around another beautiful girl, staring into her big, brown eyes. The girl, six years old, just stared, eyes wide open, then broke into a big smile.

Last year, his first here, Campbell reported to camp at 245 pounds. By the fall, he trimmed down to 209, running three miles a day and doing agility and speed drills at a local high school.

"This shows something extra, too," pointed out Rob Musgrove, assistant in the public relations department. "He was tired after performing, but went and worked out a couple of hours every day, anyway."

"You can tell he's a determined boy, just by watching him perform. He adds a lot to our shows and we're proud to have him."

Campbell, who'll be in his last year at Tech this fall, looks toward a future in television, radio or public relations.

Pro football is also another possibility, since Richard was an honorable-mention All-American last season. But, he has his doubts.

"My size, my speed or possibly my strength might keep me out of the pros," Richard declared. "But, if I got the chance, I'd probably try it."

"I'll try like the dickens to make All-American this year, but there are a lot of factors you have to consider—like staying healthy and how well your team does, among others."

All-American? Heck!

Campbell's already the MVP in this outfit.

Chinese Baptists Hear Sermons Twice

by Karen Elliott
Houston Chronicle Reporter

Some churchgoers have difficulty sitting through one sermon on Sunday morning, but members of the Chinese Baptist Church, 1823 Lamar, hear every sermon twice.

Their pastor, Lok Tin Cheung, preaches in Chinese and Mrs. Joyce Fan, his interpreter, repeats the message, sentence by sentence, in English.

Approximately 75 percent of the adults in his 650-member congregation do not speak English. Some do not speak Chinese.

The Chinese Baptist Church, now in its 16th year as an organized church, is unique in Texas. However, several Chinese missions are scattered throughout the state.

At first glance there is nothing to distinguish it from any other church.

But on the back of each pew are hymnals imported from Hong Kong and printed in both Chinese and English. The congregation also has Chinese Bibles from Hong Kong.

The church is a member of the Southern Baptist Convention and follows the same religious program as all other Southern Baptist churches.

The Rev. Mr. Cheung, pastor for the past 10 years, is a third generation Baptist from Canton, China. He graduated from Sun Yat Sen University in Canton and came to the United States to attend Baylor University in 1950. He received a master's degree in education.

"I intended to return to China but I felt called to be a pastor so I remained," he said.

Grady Timmons visited Jones Taylor at the Taylor Ranch, Sunday.

The church had its beginning in 1940 when a member of the First Baptist Church began to take Chinese children from the East Side to Sunday school. The church soon established a Sunday school of nine children whom they taught not only Christian doctrine but also correct speech.

After 10 years as a mission of First Baptist Church, the Chinese established their own congregation and constructed the building which still stands. A sanctuary was added in 1962.

The church, a modernistic building of concrete, steel and glass is not easy to see, surrounded by warehouses. Only the cross atop the 50-foot sanctuary rises above the surroundings to announce the church's location.

At first glance there is nothing to distinguish it from any other church.

"I intended to return to China but I felt called to be a pastor so I remained," he said.

The Rev. Mr. Cheung, 46, spends most of his time visiting in the homes and businesses of his congregation.

"Chinese are conservative and seldom talk about their problems so I visit with them and they talk more freely," he said.

The Rev. Mr. Cheung says the emphasis on Christianizing Chinese now is focused in the United States since the Communists have taken control of mainland China.

China was once the center of missionary work but after the Communists took over in 1949, missionary work was gradually phased out, he said.

In 1967 the Red Guard youth group scattered congregations, burned Bibles and closed churches throughout China, officially ending Christianity there.

Chinese in the United States have not forgotten those abroad. The church supports mission projects in Hong Kong and Taiwan, from where many of the most recent members emigrated.

The days of Chinese-English services may be numbered. The youth of the Rev. Mr. Cheung's congregation all speak English.

"Until two years ago, we had a summer school on Chinese culture and history and also taught the young people to read, write and speak Chinese," he said. "Interest was so low we finally had to discontinue the class."

The congregation is now planning a new $150,000 youth center across the street from the church. Funding is not yet sufficient and the youth center remains a vision for the growing congregation.
