CHAPTER XLVIII

Janet said, "Why, yes, I remember you. Jeff Grant introduced me one day last summer. You're Miss—" she hesitated—"Miss Calahan, isn't it?"

"No I made an impression!" the other girl said in mock surprise. "Yes, Dolores Calahan's my name. I've seen you a couple of times since but you didn't see me. Riding around in a big car with a chauffeur I guess you wouldn't notice anybody like me! But just the same I've got something to say to you and I'm going to get it off my chest!"

"Why, of course—" Janet began but the other girl interrupted. Dolores' dark eyes were defiant.

"What's the idea of two-timing a swell guy like Jeff Grant?" she demanded. "I saw you out there with your blond boy friend! It's because Jeff's out of town, I suppose."

"What in the world are you talking about?"

"I'm talking about you and the way you treat Jeff Grant!" Dolores went on. "You needn't act so innocent! Because you can't get away with it. The Calahan's aren't afraid to say what they think to anybody and I'm letting you right now I think you're the limit! You're the kind of a girl who thinks it's smart to let a fellow get crazy over her and then give him the air. You don't want Jeff but you don't want anyone else to have him either."

"But—"

Dolores stopped her. "Wait a minute," she said. "I'm not going to stop until I've finished. I'm not ashamed to admit I like Jeff myself and I tried to make him fall for me. I'm not the only one, either. I didn't have a chance and neither did any of the others. Why? Because he's so wild about you he doesn't know we're on earth. Say, if you don't want him why can't you lay off? Give somebody else a chance, can't you?"

Janet was staring at her. "Do you mean you think Jeff is in love with me?"

Dolores tossed her head. "I'd be blind if I couldn't see that!"

"Why, I thought—"

"Yeah! You thought you'd play your little game. Fly around with your blond Barrymore and let a swell guy like Jeff break his heart! There ought to be something done about dames like you. You make me sick!"

"Just what," Janet asked in a strained voice, "makes you think Jeff Grant is in love with me?"

"I guess I saw the way he looked at you! I've seen him moaning over a picture of you he's got, too. Oh, don't try to play innocent!"

"But he hasn't any picture of me."

"Yes, he has. A snap-shot with a couple of kids beside you. And one day I heard him talking to you on the telephone."

Janet remembered the map-phot then Jeff had taken it the day of the picnic for Rosie and Tommy Silvan. She had had no idea that he had kept one of the prints for himself.

"Listen," Dolores went on. "I'll tell you one thing—the Calahan's play square. I wouldn't be a cheap little cheater like you for anything in the world. You'll go on just the same, I suppose. You'll break Jeff's heart and then laugh at him but at least I've had the satisfaction of telling you exactly what I think of you! Good NIGHT, Miss High-and-Mighty Janet Hull!"

Head in the air, with a quick whirl, she made her exit. Janet turned toward the mirror. Five minutes later she was still staring at her reflection there.

It was three days later. There was no softly lighted table with flowers and gleaming silver and an orchestra in the distance as there had been at Reig's. This table stood in the bright midday glare of a window in a chain restaurant. Outside the sun was streaming down and the Saturday crowd filled the sidewalk.

Jeff Grant said to the girl who sat facing him. "This is a fine place to stage a party!"

"But I like it!" Janet told him. "The food's good and I always have liked to come here."

"Well, it's o. k. with me if it suits you." He turned quickly as a waitress bearing a heavily loaded tray nudged his arm. "Looks as though everyone in Lancaster were eating here today."

"That's one thing I like about it. I miss seeing crowds."

Jeff laughed. "Crowds! Say, I've seen all the crowds I want for a while! New York was a nightmare. All right, I suppose, if you're used to it but believe me, I was glad to get back to Lancaster."

Janet smiled. "Jeff," she said, "do you think it's hard for a young man to get a chance in business nowadays?"

"That's a funny question to ask. You mean a job?"

"No, not a job. I mean a chance to get ahead. To show what he can do after he gets the job."

"If a fellow's smart enough to make use of the chances that come his way he doesn't have to worry I guess. There are plenty of chances—seeing them and making the most of them is what takes the brains. What in the dickens made you think of that?"

"Oh—just something. I've got another funny question to ask, too. Will you tell me the truth?"

"Maybe. Have to hear what it is first."

The girl's eyes met his directly. "Will you tell me," Janet said slowly, "why you gave that purse we bought to Dolores Calahan?"

A dark flush rose slowly to Jeff's cheeks. "I had to get rid of it," he said. "You didn't want it."

"Then you didn't buy it—because you were in love with her?"

"In love with Dolores?" he asked, astonished. "Say, for Lord sake—!" The words were lost in sharp laughter. "Not in a hundred thousand years! Say, that's the craziest one yet. What's this all about, Janet?"

She wasn't looking at him. "I just thought you were, that's all," she said.

"But why on earth—?"

She met his eyes again. "Betty Carlyle is divorcing Rolf," she said. "She's in Reno now. I—I thought maybe you'd like to know he asked me to go to lunch with him today. I turned him down to come here with you."

"You mean—?"

His eyes asked the question and hers answered. There was a pause in which the rattle of china and silverware and the steady hum of voices beat in upon them.

"Listen," Jeff said suddenly. "I don't know if I'm going crazy or not. There's a lot I don't seem to understand and I've got to get it straight to you. Come on, Janet! I want to talk to you."

"Why, Jeff—"

"Come on," he said. "There isn't a moment to lose."

"But we haven't finished lunch."

His gesture was magnificent. "Lunch can wait!" he said. "This is important!" He steered her through the narrow aisle toward the door. On the sidewalk outside he signaled a cab.

"But where are you going?" Janet asked.

"You'll see." They stepped inside the cab. "Just head for the park," Jeff told the driver. "And keep going."

The cab started off with a jolt. Quite naturally Jeff's arm slipped about the girl's waist. Quite naturally his cheek brushed the velvet softness of her hair. "Janet," he said huskily, "haven't you known you're the only girl in the world I care about? There never has been any other. Didn't you know it was you and nobody else but you all the time?"

Her eyes were pools of happiness. "I—I thought it was Dolores," she told him. "And I thought I loved Rolf but I found out I didn't. I've never really loved him. It was the person I thought he was that I care about. Rolf wasn't like that really."

"You're sure, dear?"

"Sure!"

"Oh, you darling!" His arms tightened about her. "Janet, you're so sweet. So—so wonderful!" His eyes found hers and all at once the world became miraculous and breathless and beautiful. The miracle of Jeff's arms and Jeff's kisses. The miracle of the girl and the intoxicating sweetness of her. The miracle of youth and love and two hearts beating against each other.

There were kisses on her eyelids now, her cheeks, her hair. "How soon will you marry me?" Jeff demanded. "This afternoon?"

She laughed. "I've promised to stay with Mrs. Curtis until Betty comes home. It couldn't be before that."

"When is she coming?"

"A week from Tuesday."

"Then that's our wedding day! I'm only making $50 a week and we won't have much but we'll get along. In another year I can get another raise. And I'm going to do everything in the world to make you happy. I've got $500 in the bank—"

"Five hundred dollars! Oh, Jeff, we'll be rich!"

"I will," he said. "With you I'd be rich if I didn't have a cent. Oh, Janet, didn't you know all along—?" He stopped suddenly. "There's something I forgot."

"What?"

"Something important. I forgot to say, Janet, I love you. More than anything or everything in the world! I love you, darling. I love you!"

Her cheek was against his. She put a hand up and drew his face closer. "And I love you," she said. "Oh, Jeff, tell me again!"

He told her in a manner completely convincing.

They Wanted Him To Be A Doctor

As a youngster his mother said he would become a physician. His father had hoped that he would study law and become a member of his law firm, but here he is—look him over—he certainly don't resemble either a doctor or an attorney, does he? But "Blade" Morris, producing clown with John Willander's Circus which is coming to Big Spring for two performances on the West Third Street showgrounds at Ayersford Street, on Thursday, May 4, had different ideas of what he would be. He says why should I spend my time arguing in crowded courtrooms every day, when it's the smile that really counts, and I'll prescribe an abundance of happiness for the average ill."

Judging from the armful of happiness which he has we are inclined to agree with him.

and the German... Sartorial—That secret telephone conversation Mr. MacDonald had from the Beyogaria with the British embassy created a stir here and abroad. Actually the conversation was between a Mr. Wright, one of MacDonald's assistants and Mr. Roosevelt's assistant, Mr. J. B. Woodin. The victory has double importance. It proves that federal credit is perfectly O. K. and makes refunding operations look more possible than local bankers contended. Insiders credit the stroke to the President rather than to Mr. Woodin. The inanever also made a pronounced impression on European observers. They were watching it closely and its success greatly enhanced Mr. Roosevelt's prestige and confidence in American stability in well-posted foreign quarters. The gold clause in the issue is interpreted locally as significant of nothing more than an official sense of humor.

Business—Business men are sprouting gray hairs over the Perkins amendment to the 30-hour bill although they are reconciled to the bill itself. They claim the dictatorial powers given the Labor Department surpass Mussolini's fondest dreams. They fear that even a large corporation would be ruined if its competitors could gain political favoritism. There are several signs of improvement in the business horizon. A food corporation's sales are running 9 per cent ahead of a year ago. Aviation Corporation showed a monthly profit in March for the first time in its history. New York department store sales have had a natural drop from their Easter peak but the decline has not been nearly as sharp as the stores had feared.

Notes—Sonny Whitney recently called on Budget Director Douglas with the President of Pan American Airways trying to convince Douglas that their Caribbean line was a measure of defense, especially for the Panama Canal. Appropriations for their mail contracts almost certain to be cut. The Democrats also cut the Civil Service restrictions out of the Muscle Shoals Bill to afford a little more patronage for those too dumb to pass an examination. Jesse Jones is running the R. F. C. these days as a one-man show. He sleeps from 2 a. m. to 6 a. m. An early morning visitor recently watched him trying to put on his pants while answering four telephone calls.

NEW YORK By James McMillin Financing—The Treasury pulled one of the boldest and smartest maneuvers on record in putting over the three-year note issue at 7-8 per cent. They had plenty of advice from New York that it couldn't be done—that inflation talk would scare buyers off—That the interest was much too low—that the government credit would be wrecked if the issue weren't fully subscribed—and so forth. But the Treasury took the gamble and won. There was none of

Mrs. Grace Gaddis Taber Well Known Texas Poet Dies

Grace Addis Taber, well known West Texas poet and feature writer, died at a San Angelo hospital Saturday evening after an illness of several months. Mrs. Taber made her home in Big Spring several years ago when her sister, Mrs. Warren H. Smith, resided here. She returned to San Angelo to live, where she has resided since, except for a few months during the past winter when she and her husband, H. H. Taber, made their home in Fort Worth. They went back to San Angelo hoping that Mrs. Taber would regain her health there.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at Johnson's Funeral Home with the Rev. J. Grady Timmons officiating. Mrs. Taber was survived by her husband, her father, C. A. Gaddis, of Phoenix, Ariz.; two brothers, Paul of Phoenix, and J. C. of the United States Marines; and two sisters, Mrs. W. H. Smith and Mrs. Don Herbert, both of Tulsa, Okla. Mrs. Smith was with her at the time of her death.

Mrs. Taber used her maiden name as her pen name. She had begun to gain recognition as a poet in her home state of Oklahoma, before moving to Texas. While she lived in Big Spring, which was shortly after her move to this state, her poems appeared in state periodicals and attracted attention of poet lovers over a wide area. She was one of the candidates for Texas poet laureate. Her poem "Gypsy Blood" won second place in the Kaleidograph annual award and was widely reprinted. Her "Song of the Pioneers," written in honor of the early settlers of the San Angelo country attracted much favorable comment throughout the West and was broadcast from Fort Worth. Her career as a poet was an exceptionally promising one. Her feature stories were chiefly Wilke, Steve Ford, C. W. Cunningham, V. Van Gleson, Shine Phillips, O. L. Thomas, B. T. Cardwell, Homer McNew and Wm. Fahrerkamp.

concerned with interesting phases of the oil industry and appeared in leading oil magazines. Mrs. Taber had many friends in Big Spring. She has appeared before the Hyperion Club of this city in readings. Her poem, "Gypsy Blood" was read on Fine Arts Day when the club presented prominent residents and ex-residents who were acquiring fame for their original compositions.

Junior Hyperion Holds Its Annual Bridge-Luncheon

The members of the Junior Hyperion Club met at the Settles Hotel Saturday for their annual bridge luncheon which terminates the club season for the year. The luncheon table was set with freshly cut roses and vases of roses were on the playing tables in the card room. Miss Pool made high score and Miss Evans second high. Both received nice gifts. Three officers were elected to fill the vacancies created by the resignation from the club of the members: Misses Pool and Currie and Mrs. Stegner. Those nominated were: Miss McNew, president; Miss Pickle, vice-president; Mrs. Murt, corresponding secretary. Several former members of the club were guests for the luncheon and bridge. Miss Francys McNew did not stay for the games. Those playing were: Misses Jena and Dorothy Jordan, Clara Pool, Agnes Currie, Eleanor Antley, Clara Secrest, Ethel Evans; Meses. C. K. Hivings, Robert Parks, H. Stagner, Ira Thurman and Harry Hurt.

Local Bridge Experts To Compete Against Nation's Best In Olympic Tonight

The following high lights on the world-wide bridge olympic to be played this evening all over the world, an olympic in which eight tables of Big Spring players will participate for the first time have been reported by Mrs. Ashley Williams, local captain:

"People speaking twenty different tongues will meet in more than 1,000 groups, handling the globe, to enter the competition. On the stroke of eight, Sir Boms of Batavia, Dutch East India, who will drive 100 miles to get his hands and then drive another 200 miles in order to take part in the game, will be striving to play better contract bridge than members of the Women's Community Club of Berkeley, Cal., who are holding a tournament to add to the fund for furnishing their new clubhouse.

"Japanese in Yokohama, Japan, will play the same hands as American soldiers in the American barracks in Tientsin, China, where twelve tables will be in the race for the World Bridge Olympic trophies. Five hundred players will sit down to the game in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and seventy-five tables will participate in the David Jones, Limited, the Sydney, Australia, department store, game. Forty tables have been ordered by the team manager at Cannes, France; sixty tables for The Hague, Holland; twenty tables for Zagreb, Jugoslavia, and C. T. Steger, American Consul at Beirut, Syria, is among the entries from that city.

"The Governors of several States will play, and at least one States Assistant Attorney-General is running a tournament. Doctors of the Mayo clinic in Rochester, Minn., and doctors of the New York Physicians Club are among the contestants. The largest game to date is the one planned by the Long island Grotto, a Masonic group, who will entertain more than 1,500 players in a tournament in Brooklyn, N. Y. West trophy last year will head a game of more than 800 players in Boston, under the sponsorship and for the benefit of several Boston charities."

Mrs. Williams concludes "After the Olympic each player will receive information from the bridge association about the correct playing of the 16 hands; also copies of the winning north-south and east-west plays."

What To Plant In West Texts

Miss Miller, H. D. Agent, Tells What Vegetables To Raise Here And How

Miss Myrtle Miller, home demonstration agent for Howard, Martin and Midland counties, has been concentrating on concrete tile sub-irrigation in gardening.

She says that orders for 4030 feet of tile have already been placed in the three counties and she expects more. Three individuals have ordered 1000 feet each.

The work is being done with R.F.C. labor so that the tile is laid for the cost of the materials only, which in these counties amounts to one cent a foot.

The advantage of the sub-irrigation is that water gets at the roots of the plants where it is most needed, and the ground does not bake on top; also that less water is needed.

In the state 383 farm gardens were irrigated with this manner in 1932 and the method is increasingly popular because it extends the spring season and advances the fall season by a month.

West Texas Strawberries
Miss Miller is enthusiastic over the way this dry country grows strawberries. Big Spring people are already acquainted with the strawberry beds in the homes of Mrs. Ira Driver, C. T. Watson, Loy Acuff and Mrs. W. J. McAdams, to name only a few.

A Stanton woman, Mrs. Nell B. Casey, formerly Martin county treasurer, has announced that her strawberry patch has already netted her $10 during April, and this is only the second year of its growth.

She made this by selling 325 plants and $3 worth of berries. The small plants make runners, some as many as a dozen, so that one plant gives its owner a dozen for the coming year. Mrs. Casey has orders placed ahead for her May strawberries. Next year she is going to increase her bed.

What To Grow
Miss Miller has been working on a list of vegetables to grow out here. This is her report:

"Vegetables that will grow almost anywhere can be grown here in Midland county," according to M. O. Prestridge, truck grower, six miles west of Midland on the Odessa highway.

Now is the time to plan the garden that will supply the summer vegetables for the table and to can. The all around garden is made up of perennials, long lived and short lived vegetables. For convenience of cultivation and subsequent planting the perennials should be grouped together, the long lived vegetables on one side and the short lived ones on the other. Varieties recommended for the table, when fresh and canned, are as follows:

Perennials
Asparagus, Mary Washington, Rhubarb, Sage (dried for future use), Mint (dried for future use), Horse radish and other seasoning plants (dried for future use), Onions, Garlic.

Long Lived Vegetables
Beans: Pole Kentucky Wonder, Snap, Burpee Stringless, Bountiful, Lima beans: Pole, Bush, Fordhook, Henderson.
Beets: Crosby's Egyptian, Detroit Dark Red, Ohio Canner.
Cabbage: Early Jersey Wakefield, Copenhagen Market, Stein's Flat Dutch, Mammoth Red Rock, Collards: Georgia, Southern.
Carrots: Chantenay, Denver's

Kill The Cut Worms

Cutworms are easily poisoned with poisoned bran mash. Use three pounds bran, 2 ounces white arsenic, 1-2 pint molasses, one lemon or orange, and 1 pint of water. Mix the bran and arsenic dry. Squeeze the lemon into the molasses and grind the peel in a food chopper. (The peel contains a better flavor than the juice). Pour in the water and stir, then stir this into the poisoned bran. Stir until all the bran is moist. Sow broadcast where worms are expected to be troublesome.

This mash would poison chickens unless they are fed well. A good practice is to sow the poison mash after planting at nightfall and rake the ground early next morning so the chickens cannot get much of the mash.

Watchman's Worst Scare Caused By Elephant Couple

HOUSTON, (UP)—When people remark to Ed Reagan that he has the spookiest, loneliest job in Houston, he laughs, shuffles his feet, says "aw!" and blushes.

In June he will round out his fourth year as night watchman at the municipal zoo in Hermann Park. From 9 p. m. to 6 a. m. he is the sole human in the big animal enclosure.

Each night he makes nine complete rounds of the cages, punching his watchman's clock at nine stations in the scattered menagerie. While he is working Reagan resembles an African big game hunter. In addition to wearing a .45 Calibre pistol, he carries a .22 rifle and often a shotgun. A flashlight is fitted to his hat.

He wears heavy boots to protect him from snakes and rats.

At night the zoo is a strange place. It is filled with weird sounds of the jungle and with eyes that gleam red in the dark.

Shooting rats—a constant menace to the zoo's feed supply—is a regular part of his job, hence the .22 rifle. He is considered a sharpshooter, dropping rats with ordinary .22 "shirts."

Spring nights are the worst in the zoo, he says. The animals are more restless then. The lions roar, the hyenas howl, the owls hoot, and the darkness is filled with all kinds of moans and rustlings.

Once a fox dug his way out of a cage and met Reagan as he was making his rounds. When his eyes flashed in the light, Reagan drew his pistol. The fox died as he tasted of liberty.

Something to Say

not just saying something

A friend of CHESTERFIELD writes us of a salesman who had "something to say":

"I dropped into a little tobacco shop, and when I asked for a pack of Chesterfields the man smiled and told me I was the seventh customer without a break to ask for Chesterfields. 'Smokpr after smoker,' he said, 'tells me that Chesterfields click... I sell five times as many Chesterfields as I did a while back.'"

Yes, there's something to say about Chesterfields and it takes just six words to say it—"They're mild and yet they satisfy."

Wherever you buy Chesterfields, you get them just as fresh as if you came by our factory door.
