Cotton Movement Is Halted, But Little Damage Feared

Rains, amounting to more than an inch, fell over the Big Spring territory Monday night and Tuesday morning to paralyze the cotton movement, but at the same time send small grain and range prospects booming.

Grain Benefitted

Clearing skies at noon minimized threats of damage to open cotton and buyers estimated that little harm would result if the cotton is left alone in two good days of sunshine. Probably 6,000 bales of cotton was open in the fields of this

Texas Cities Decide To Fight Infringement Claims

Two other Texas towns Tuesday sued on patent infringement in connection with the operation of electric traffic signals. The Natio at Electric Signal company filed suits in San Angelo against Brownwood and Coleman. Others already named in similar litigation besides Big Spring, are McKinney, Sherman, Tyler, Plainview, Vernon and Electra. It is expected that other suits will follow.

Meanwhile, representatives of some 25 Texas municipalities, meeting in Dallas last week, decided to fight the infringement claims. They will file answers in the cases already before the courts, and arrange for counsel. This decision, it was said, was based on a 1934 suit involving Waco, in which a federal judge held for the city, and an apeals court upheld the decision.

The many instances of the re quirement of practically total abstinence on the part of those who handle trains has been a large factor in developing the high quality of our railroad employees. There is no group of employees in the couna try who are more substantial, more dependable, more respected than the employees of our railroads. Labor would have little difficulty in solving its problems if labor as whole possessed the high character and capacity of the railroad men. "It is even more important that drivers of our automobiles should be abstinent than that the engineers of our trains should abstain because trains are operated on tracks of their own whereas our highways are packed with automo biles driven by people with varied training and capacity. Further-more, automobiles go fully as fast as most of the trains. There is more risk both of collision and of injury to pedestrians."—(Submitted by the local WCTU).

GRACIE PROVES A BARB Before Nina, in all her prepara ons, had been the vision of

There were not enough little tables to put things on. David had to eat off the mantel. Jack Knight looked uncomfortable with two plates on his knees, and his glass on the floor beside him.

Nina had planned on some hot soup to start off the cold meal; but in her embarassment over the general disturbance, she forgot it until they were well into the lobster salad. Gracie went out with her, into the messy kitchen, and helped her carry in the cups—the very last thing Nina wanted.

The mangled salad and halfeaten sandwiches looked particularly unappetizing, when they returned them. Nina could think of less and less to say.

Her color grew more like the belly of a perch, by the minute.

The meal, that had taken so many hours to prepare, was over in what seemed like as many minutes. Although the living-room looked like a hotel pantry after a convention banquet, she began to worry that they had not had enough to eat.

David was having such a good time with Gracie, that she began to hate him. Every word of praise about her food sounded, to her distraught ears, like a grown-up's didn't, and I know it. Now will you kindly efforts to humor a child:
