Jenkins and Campbell, who frequently fished together, went to the lake at 9 a.m. and fished from the bank throughout the morning, catching only small perch, which they threw back into the lake. As Jenkins left for the city to replenish the balt supply, Campbell took the boat, tin-bottomed shallow structure, eight feet long, onto the lake, carrying with him two fishing poles and lines. He was wearing his heavy coat when he entered the boat, Jenkins said.
