The Rich Man And Lazarus

This parable of our social obligations. The law of God is fulfilled in us only as we have a benevolent attitude to all our fellow men. "He that loveth his brother abideth in light." Whosoever hateth his brother is a murdered. This is what is spoken of as the social gospel. The word hate does not necessarily mean malignan; antipathy: it means merely the absence of love. We cannot be neutral here. We are under social obligations in proportion to our trength. The gifts of health, wealth learning hich station, and the like enable us to be helpful to our fellow men in larger degree, and a Christian spirit will prompt esocial commensurate with our advantages.

By DR. J. E. NUNN

Death works a great change, The rich man died, and so did the beggar. By death the beggar lost has neverty and the rich man lost beggar. By death the beggar loss has poverty and the rich man lost his wealth. His riches went into other hands; not one penny of it could be his now. As a cold and could be his now. As a cold and belp-less corpse he was one with his unfortunate neighbor. The only source of his satisfaction came world where no one needed us.
