Axiom Of Strong Defense Still One Of Best Peace Assurances

American understands one thing fairly well: As long as aggressive communism, armed to the teeth, is alive and on the prowl, the threat of war will hang over our heads. It will blow hot and it will blow cold, but it will always be there.

We feel reasonably sure every literate American understands another thing: That our chance of survival depends absolutely on being prepared to fight at the drop of a hat. Not halfway prepared, not prepared with skeleton forces to be filled out in our own good time, but prepared connuously. War is no longer a matter of nths and years. It is a matter of hours and weeks. If we're not prepared to go immediately, we are sunk.

And yet another proposition, this one laid down by George Washington: A strong military establishment is the best grance of peace. Let us turn that around and say that a weak military establishment is an invitation of war.

President Eisenhower's program for military manpower has now been handed to Congress. It is designed to build up and strengthen the reserves, with special emphasis on insuring a high rate of reenlistments in the regular establishment by providing the incentive of better pay and more "fringe benefits" for the men and their families.

Re-enlishments in all services have slumped alarmingly and this is dangerous. It is dangerous because our armed forces must be ready to go at a moment's notice, and it takes a long time to train a combat soldier to handle modern weapons.

Later will come congressional action on the administration's cutback of manpower under arms. That is a controversial matter, and small surprise; for as a Washington columnist of Newsweek points out, the administration's uniformed personnel proposals have been changed three times in three weeks, and five times in the last nine months. This wishywashiness is puzzling to most Americans, and must be more so to the friends and allies we rely upon to stand by our side.

You can't put more weight on a steer by cutting down his feed. You can't have more defense with less manpower armed and ready to go.

Tests of atomic weapons that reporters were permitted to observe were held in April, 1952, and March, 1953. But advance ons indicate that the public test to be held probably in late April or early May will be of greater significance than any public demonstration to date. Certainly, if present plans are carried out it will be the most completely covered test ever held, since television and radio will be on the spot. Consideration has been given to a bomb drop from an airplane. But factors of varying winds at different altitudes seem to rule this out. WASHINGTON. - As the climax of a steel tower that was vaporized when the standards that was a more-or-less primitive explosion. The bomb to be set off in the spring will be of an advanced type. There are at present no plans for new tests of the hydrogen bomb in 1955. Those responsible for charting America's atomic development say it is unlikely such tests will be held this year.

H-bomb tests at the Bikina atoll in the Far Pacific are very costly and they require months of advanced preparation. Such tests are held only when required by important new developments in weaponing. They would never be undertaken for some minor change such as, for example, an improvement in the closure of

The H-bomb tests held in the Pacific last spring had the most profound political and psychological repercussions in almost every part of the world. This was accentuated when Japanese fishermen were subjected to a fall out of radioactive ash. One of the fishermen died and the United States recently agreed with the Japanese government on the sum of $2,000,000 as compensation for the crew and their fam-

In Western Europe newspapers carried sensational headlines of the extent of destructiveness demonstrated by the Hbomb, which was reported to have completely destroyed a small atoll, leaving a large hole in the ocean floor. British newspapers ran maps showing that such an explosion would virtually wipe out the entire British population. The shock produced by reports of these tests is thought to have contributed to the rise of neutralism a plague on both colossi, Russia and America — in Western Europe.

Freakish weather in Europe - abnormally low temperatures, continuous rain and floods and other phenomena - were widely attributed to the Pacific explosions. It was said that atomic dust sent up into the upper atmosphere by the vast upheaval had interefered with the sun's rays to create the unusual weather.

Here, too, it is expected that the policy of more information will be brought to bear. Studies by commission scientists have refuted the charge of some European and American specialists that radioactivity already in the atmosphere is beyond the danger point and that future generations are bound to be affected Nevertheless, the commission is now conducting a restudy in which all factors on both the negative and the positive sides will be re-

Sen. Knowland Continues To Provide Evidence He's White House Problem

WASHINGTON UP - Once more ican fliers. He wanted the U.N. blockade Red China. Sen. Knowland of California, the to help but suggested the United The only thing thoroughly clear has given evidence he will remain that was necessary. a problem to the White House.

He expressed disappointment yesterday over Red China's failure to release the 11 captured American airmen. Others before him, including Eisenhower, had done the same. It was the way Knowland did it which made the difference.

Eisenhower had asked Amer-icans to avoid talk of "reprisals or retaliation" against the Red Chinese while the United Nations tries to win freedom for the fliers imprisoned on spying charges the United States has termed false. Earlier, Knowland had called for a blockade of China-a reprisal-if Red China did not free the airmen. That idea of blockading Red China has been in Knowland's mind almost from the time Eisenhower stepped into the White House in 1953, although the reasons have not always been the same.

In Eisenhower's first month in office, while the Korean War was going on, Knowland urged Red China be blockaded. Knowland wasn't Republican Senate leader then. He didn't become leader until Sen. Robert A. Taft's death in the summer of 1953. When Taft became ill, he chose Knowland as acting leader. After the Ohioan died, the Republican senators-not Eisenhower-ratified the choice. Knowland fought hard for Eisenhower on many issues but on some he differed with the White House.

Knowland has said he considers himself in a dual role: he represents White House views to Senate and the Senate's views to the White House. But so far, he could hardly claim to be expressing the views of a majority of the Senate when he advocates a China blockade. There is no sign of majority support to back him.

Last July, when it was already American policy to try to keep Red China out of the U.N., Knowland said he would resign his Senate leadership and fight to take the United States out of the U.N. front room, oblivious to Eddie led Eisenhower to say all over again the United States was opposed to U.N. membership for the The network Red Chinese.

The current hilbbub about the invasion of Costa Rica by exiles operating from foreign bases, following so closely on the assassination of the Panamanian president, certainly indicates that Latin America has yet to fully appreciate the constitutional processes of government. Yet the mere fact that these occurrences, like the Guatemalan uprising, were news indicates that all of the 20-odd Latin American nations are not in continual revolt, as we North Americans sometimes assume.

Certainly the pattern of a revolt or a coup d'etat every two or three years that we read about in history books has slowed. One Latin American country, Uruguay, has had a stable government with elections at suitable intervals for over half century. Our neighbor to the south, Mexico, has been holding elections with less and less bloodshed as years go by.

Even where a coup d'etat or revolution has occurred the winner has been able to hold on to power for a number of years. Peron continues to keep a strong hand or

There are about a dozen well-defined forms of boards and commissions to run state government business. Texas has examples of each. My idea here is to point out a couple that Texas thought up by

There are full-time, full-pay commissions; part-time, half pay commissions with appointive executives; lots of "exofficio" boards and commissions made up of constitutional officers given additional powers; one elective over-lay term commission of full-time members. There are unofficial committees and commissions invited to advisory duties by the governor, or authorized by the Legislature.

The trend in Texas is to the unpaid citizen commission of three members, such as Public Safety and Public Welfare and the Liquor Control Board, which name the executive to run their departments. More numerous are the nine-member unpaid commissions, such as all the boards of regents, the Game Commission. These three-and nine-member have overlapping terms are thus supposed to be beyond the reach of politics.

The Highway Commission and Board of Control are three-member bodies, expected to put in so much time that the members are paid nominal part-time sal-agencies. There are three insurance departments headed by separate commissioners. These three fulltime officials make up the Board of Insurance Commissioners, only agency to have both terms, board and commission, in its title. This particular type of organization has been criticized by those suggesting changes in insurance administration;

but it has worked effectively, The other agency without precedent is the Youth Development Council. It is made up of the executive officers of half a dozen state departments, who of course don't get any extra pay for its work, plus a number of citizens, not otherwise in public office, who are unpaid. Its administrative officer is the director of public welfare.

Though so diffuse in its makeup and official angles of interest, it has functioned with remarkable success.

Texas has another board that is unusual, not in form or function, but in the source of its members' appointment. Formerly the Pardon Board was named by the governor. Now, by constitutional provision, one member is appointed by the governor, one by the chief justice of Supreme Court, one by the presiding Judge of Criminal Appeals Court, Terms are a general impression that American tariff rates are too high and that what he is asking for is authority to lower them a little bit by reciprocal agreements arrived at by international bargaining. I wonder whether this puts the real problem in its proper focus. Perhaps we can reach a clearer definition of that problem by saying that the main trouble today is not the level of the tariff rates. In the United States they are by and large not exorbitantly high any longer. The real problem is economic warfare. All the governments have armed themselves with legal powers which they use to interfere with the international markets for goods. They use them offensively and they use them defensively to cut down, to cut off, to divert, to penalize, to subsidize buying and selling so that the pattern of transactions is different from what it would be under the free operation of supply and demand.

Ending Of Economic Warfare Better Than Tariff Changes

I think I am right in saying this, that the main trouble is not the level of the tariff rates established by the legislatures. If only the levels are known and are not subject to quick and arbitrary change, the trading community throughout the world can and will adapt itself to the rates. Provided the rate is stable, question of whether it should be higher or lower is primarily a domestic issue. It is a domestic question whether industries should be protected for reasons of national defense or whether they should be exposed to international competition for reasons of efficiency and for the service of the consumer.

The fact of the matter is that trade is, that trade has to be, reciprocal and no international agreements are needed to make it reciprocal. It is an optical illusion to believe the contrary. If we lower an American tariff rate and allow some foreign goods to be sold in the United States, the dollars earned by the foreign importers will in the end have to be used to buy goods produced in America. The notion that the American markets can be "flooded" with foreign goods all coming one way cannot be true. For what on earth would the foreigner want to do with the dollars he earns? What good are American dollars to a foreigner unless, he or someone to whom he sells his dollars, spend them in the markets where dollars are the currency?

Almost anywhere in the world today, and for all I know perhaps also in the Communist world, an American can pay his bills with dollars. But why should an Italian taxicab driver or a French shop-keeper be glad to be paid in American dollars? Because he believes that he can always exchange the American dollars at a good rate for lire or francs.

Reading the President's message on With whom can he exchange dollars? With who knows someone else who intends, to buy something in America that can be bought only with American dollars.

If the foreigners who earned American dollars by exporting goods to this country did not get those dollars spent in America, they would not be selling their imports to us. They would be giving them to us!

All of this is to say that, except as a matter of domestic practical American politics, tariff rates do not need to be fixed by reciprocal bargains. The real point of reciprocal bargaining power lies elsewhere. It lies in the field of what we might call the ending of economic warfare and the beginning of economic disarmament. Almost all countries, and we are well in the lead among them, are armed with economic weapons of offense and defense. These weapons include such devices as import quotas, which limit or even prohibit citizens from buying certain commodities, regardless of the price, the quality, the supply and demand. The weapons include exchange restrictions, export subsidies, preferential treatment for public contracts as in the Buy American Act, preferential rates as in the British commonwealth, the "peril point" gadget and the "escape clause," which make almost all tariff rates unstable and subject to quick and arbitrary change.

The characteristic of these weapons of sconomic warfare is that they are not the fixed rules and laws of trade but are operated by administrative decisions made, often under political pressure, by bureau-

the time TCU played LSU in the mud and rain in the Cotton Bowl:
"They had us backed up on our own five-yard line. But I didn't worry. We had ol' Sambo Baugh to punt us out of trouble. When the ball landed, the mud splashed right in my eyer And I never had mud in the eye that felt so good."

PETE JENKINS, trainer of the local Golden Gloves boxing team: "I guess I had as many as 40 boys come down for workouts but most of them didn't hang around long. They don't like the rough work. What boys remained, however, are in fine shape and should make a good showing in Odessa this week."

Meyer, who coached at TCU for three decades, recalled many of the experiences that occurred during his long and esteemed coaching tenure at the Fort Worth

He said Sammy Baugh was one of the greatest players who ever lived, in his estimation, because he was "capable of thinking in a tight spot and because he was forever pulling the unexpected."

Meyer also had a word of ad-vice for the "sideline coaches." He suggested that one of the easlest things was to replay a game and win it, which "coa the stands" are apt to do.
