Stop Tech's 5th Column

Through the efforts of Lubbock's American Legion and co-operation of College Avenue merchants, plans have been completed for decorating the Avenue with a Christmas tree every 25 feet along the sidewalk from fourteenth to tenth streets.

The City of Lubbock has agreed to drill sidewalk holes for the trees. There will be no tree ornaments, but placing of the trees within itself will be a generous and unusual step for Lubbock businessmen to take in the interest of Texas Tech students.

THE TOREADOR doesn't want to seem pessimistic, but there remains the case of that unknown non-entirety whose perverted sense of humor caused a pre-pp rally burning of the Homecoming bonfire. Identity of that misfit remains unknown. He is still at large.

To deal with such a social scourge, straight-thinking students must anticipate his next move. One of such caliber likely would consider stealing or damaging those trees on a hilarious joke. To his simple emotions, it would be a deed worthy of long hours of reminiscent humor. Such an act to him would be a crowning pinnacle of impractical pranks during his fall semester's career.

In the first place, that "student" shouldn't have happened. But, since he has, others must prevent his extra-curricula activities. If college students are old enough to fight a war for their country, they are old enough to quell a one-man rebellion in their own school.

Presentation of those Christmas trees will be a generous gesture to Texas Tech students from downtown citizens. Appreciation should be shown by respect for the gift.

"Bring A Child Up . . ."

One of the principal defects of our educational system is evident in the persistence of dishonesty—cheating—in obtaining passing marks in college courses. The defect is the failure to impress on the adolescent mind the main purpose of education.

The child begins primary school, the boy or girl enters Junior high and the young man or woman graduates from high school. The chances are that in none of these successive steps of secondary education has the student been instructed in, or impressed with, the fundamental purpose of education, which is the acquisition of ability thru the acquisition of knowledge. Ability, in this sense, means more than mechanical, professional or artistic ability—the wherewithal to gain an independent livelihood. It includes ability to understand the problems of an organized society, and through such understanding the ability to aid in solution and disposition of the problems.

Students who slide through college courses with passing marks in order to get a degree that symbolizes the possession of knowledge and the facility to apply it miss the boat, for the symbol in itself is a lie and a misrepresentation. They don't know, and never will know, why they are attending college.

These unguided souls are the ones who bring to college the idea that fraud, swindling, is perfectly legitimate in pursuit of the symbol which identifies them as persons of higher education. Yet, they cannot be entirely blamed, since nobody tried to convince them that they swindle only themselves.

This conception is a hangover from the childishness of high school days. Pride—vanity—originated the impulse to "get by." Even children dislike being deemed morons. Parental and instructor inertia permitted survival of the impulse. The supervisory method, both in the home and the school, creates the impression that an education is being forcefully imposed, instead of the idea that it is a privilege and necessary acquisition.

We commend and re-commend the honor system, which is used so successfully in many professional schools—with Texas University's Law school an excellent example. But we do so advisedly, in realization that the jump from the "get it anyway to get by" idea of high school to the "get it yourself for your own benefit" idea of the honor system would constitute too drastic a change to assimilate in one step. The student should be gradually addicted to the honor system in high school in order that he can be fully exposed to it in college.

The honor system is beneficial to the student in many ways, and to the institution itself in some ways. It creates greater respect in the student for both school and instructors. Increases and enhances a feeling of self-reliance in the student. It dispenses with the idea that cheating is "a way of getting through life." It creates greater pride in achievement and stimulates the competitive instinct. In general, it enables colleges to turn out more worthwhile citizens of greater honesty and responsibility.

Directors of secondary schools who refuse to modernize their psychological approach, from the "make 'em learn it" attitude, are but worthy of the trust of molding human life. On their shoulders rests the burden of righting our educational routine.

Dedicated To Our Readers

The West Texas hospital looks like headquarters for old home week, as your editor mops his unfevered brow, gives birth to a couple of hacking coughs, and tosses this column—like his cookies—from room 204. In spite of rumors to the contrary, he IS NOT IN THE MATERNITY WARD! He is a victim of cold, damp weather, shoes without soles, and a conceit which made him think flu germs were too small to be considered.

Anyhow, it's not a bad life—far from the toil and strife and cussing and dirt of his office—washed and fed and pampered by beautiful women who look like their mothers were frightened by Hedy Lamar, he is lolling in the lap of luxury. Not a thing in the world to worry about—except classes to make up, nose drops, pills, capsules, a sweat-box in which he is regularly toasted half to death, and a ghoul-like human who rushes in and jams three feet of cold steel up his nose every six minutes. Also the cheerful nurse who takes this temperature—murmurs, "tsk, tsk," in a subdued voice, and then leaves so quietly and respectfully that he feels he is standing with both feet in the grave, waiting to be shoveled in.

That game over in Albuquerque that some of you may have heard about by now still hurts like a violent sinus tissue. But what made us feel worse was hearing a Techster pop off last night to the effect that "Hell, they just laid down on us, that's all."

WE DOUBT THAT STATEMENT NOW—AND WE ALWAYS WILL!

Any time the Red Raiders get beat, it's by a better team, and there's no disgrace in that. But anyone who has watched this smallest and lightest of all the Red Raider squads play this year would know that there hasn't been any premium placed on "laying down."

We didn't see the game—as this column is being written, we haven't even seen an account of it. But we know that if the Red Raiders were beaten it was NOT BECAUSE THEY QUIT!

WE HAVE CLIMBED THEIR FRAMES FROM TIME TO TIME OVER DIFFERENT REASONS—BUT WE BELIEVE NOW, AND ALWAYS WILL THAT THIS IS AS FINE A SQUAD IN SO FAR AS SPIRIT IS CONCERNED AS WE HAVE EVER SEEN.

We still can't help wondering about those publications elections which will be coming up shortly, and if we are to once more have the same old beefs that were hurled last year.

For instance, take this matter of allowing candidates to use nothing but placards in their campaign, (in the matter of literature.)

Of course, the campus might get just a little messed up, but if memory serves the old man still, he has seen this college's grounds literally snow-flaked with advertisements at least a couple of times since he has been here.

Maybe it's just because we hear so much of "I want this" and "I gotta have that" from students who didn't even know who was in the race last year that causes us to wonder if it wouldn't be a good idea to sort of cut loose this year, and try one more high, wide and handsome campaign.

After all, the largest number of votes ever cast was recorded in last year's election, and it still did not represent above fifty per cent of the student body.

We'd like to hear some expression from the student body on this question—with a few rules for campaigning, so how about it?

And another thing we would like to see all over the campus would be a lot more enthusiasm about the Varsity Show. Thirteen clubs have already pledged their support to the show and numerous individuals have given their moral, as well as physical support, but we still want the student body to be 100 per cent behind it.

It is just this sort of thing that will put Tech on the map and go a long way in establishing traditions here. Yes, Tech is growing up.

There is no reason why the show should not be successful in every respect. The students have shown their eagerness to have one, and if it is successful there is no excuse for not putting over a bigger one next year.

The theme, is to be, we have heard, college life set to sweet and swing.

This Amusing World

WITH everything whizzing by so fast, it is hard to keep up with all the goings-on, but there are a few things that we have to keep on our toes and find out about. . . one such thing is the VARSITY SHOW, the reality of the existence of the same depending upon such a stupid little thing as financial backing. All good things come in little packages and some of the better things for Tech could be in the form of underwritings for enough dough to put the show over by the various clubs and campus organizations. . . There still hasn't been quite enough promise to put the thing over in the grand style that we all want it to go over the top. . . We don't want such a show as the famous Zeigfeld Follies. We can't even expect anything like it. However, as soon as the funds are established production will get underway and we promise the whole wide world that talent is NOT lacking in Texas Tech! Huckleberry Haddock is still on the march and at club meeting tonight it would help a lot if some individual in each club would bring up the subject—DO WE WANT A SHOW—OR DON'T WE?

W-WHEW-w-w-w — Of all the tall tales being told — we never heard anything quite like it before. . . This special train to Albuquerque was really a humdinger, wasn't it? From all we can gather, the trip was worth a cool million bucks in itself. Maybe by this time next year some of the stories will quit flowing so strongly, but the way they are going now it will take a lot of time to stop them. This IS still Double T campus, isn't it?

IN THE ORCHID DEPARTMENT: There might be an awful shortage after this, but everyone of the students that surged down to the sideline of the most recent ball game urging their team onward should have their share of the bouquets! They weren't there yelling for their team because they were ahead, as a matter of fact, the score was 10-0 in favor of the opposing team — that didn't stop them; they had to get it out of their systems, and they did an excellent job of it, too! It's simply amazing how much noise a handful of loyal students can make when they feel the urge. . . they drowned out the whole student body, reportedly 6000 strong, from across the way!

NEXT Sunday afternoon, H. R. Knickerbocker, who has been a war correspondent for the International students Service for a long time will lecture at the Lubbock High school auditorium starting at 2:30 . . . he has roved the world for news and has been named twice in Mott's "100 Best News Stories" and in 1930 took the Pulitzer Prize for foreign correspondence. ## In The Mail Pouch

Editor, THE TOREADOR
Dear Sir:

In reply to the unwarranted and unjustly critical letter written by the misinformed, obviously disloyal and cowardly Techster who attacked "Jumbo" Webster, we wish to present our point of view on his efficiency.

If said expert saw the New Mexico-Tech game we hope he is properly subdued because the demonstration by Webster's own team mates is sufficient proof of their recognition of his ability.

The untrue statements made by the discreditable student in question raised the ire of many a Webster fan. Therefore, this letter is forwarded to the Editor in hopes that it will play a small part in doing away with such unfavorable comments.

The wedding of Miss Mary Ellen Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Jones of Dallas, to Nard Lair of Jourdan, has been announced here. The bride is a graduate of Tech where she majored in art.

Mr. Lair is also a graduate of Tech. The couple will live in Jourdan, where he is band director and science instructor in the high school.

Announcement
To announce the engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Troy Allen, instructor in applied arts, home economics division, and Robert L. Lockard, assistant professor in allied arts and architecture, Miss Martye Poindexter, Elizabeth Hawley and Margaret W. Weeks entertained approximately 60 guests at a tea Saturday at the home of Miss Poindexter, 2706 Twentieth street.

Serving table was centered with a bridal party with silver lettering which read "Troy and Bob, December 21."

Military Ball Staged Friday

Cadets Will Present Honorary Officers

Fifth annual military ball will be given in honor of the four honorary sponsors, who were selected by popular vote of the military unit, Friday night at the Lubbock hotel.

Sponsors will be presented to the group after the sixth dance. They will be dressed in white uniforms, skirts and capes lined with red, black Sam Brown belts and white boots.

Members of the Military unit will be in full dress uniforms, while other guests will be in formal attire.

Decorations will carry out a patriotic theme with the use of the Society of American Military Engineers' insignia.

Dates of the ROTC members will be given miniature sabers as favors.

Jack York and his orchestra will furnish the music.
