THE BIG NEWS is on the inside page too. Probably you read the front page of your paper first. But think how soon you forget the "news of the day" and how long you enjoy the things you buy because of some item in an advertisement. Almost always, there is big news for you somewhere in the advertising columns of this paper. Look for it. Here's a piece that tells how to make a nicer angel cake—a note on the new models of the car you hope to buy next—news of fashions and furnishings, of hardware and hats... Interesting, intimate, often dramatic news that really concerns you and yours. Remember that size alone is not a measurement of value. Often an advertisement in small space will offer just what you want at a saving. So form the good habit of reading the advertising section of this paper carefully. It will save you time and money. It will make your home healthier, wealthier, happier. Read and you will find!

LEAP YEAR BRIDE

by SAUL LOU BROOKMAN

CHAPTER XLVIII
The gray kitten mewled again. It was on fifth step down from the top of the flight and as Phillips reached for it the kitten backed away. Its fur mottled perpendicularly and from its mouth there came a sharp hissing "Pfft!" It was Cherry's kitten.

"Pinky!" Dan Phillips exclaimed. He picked up the little animal, holding it to the light. It was Pinky—there could be no doubt about it.

Pearson, elbow, asked impatiently, "What's the idea. What's the cat got to do with—?"

But Dan was not listening. One quick glance about him and he was running up the stairs. There were three doors opening off the third floor hallway. One led to Dixie Shannon's tiny quarters and another to the Morris' room. Phillips had never stepped behind the third door. It was a vacant apartment—but no, a tiny crack of light gleamed above the door sill!

A half dozen strides carried Dan to that door. The kitten, having established acquaintance, cradled close to his arm. It was purring in a sleepy sing-song.

Dan knocked.

There was no answer but he heard a rustling sound on the opposite side of the door. He knocked a second time.

Then slowly, hesitantly, the door opened. There she stood! Cherry wearing the yellow house dress in which he had seen her so often. The lamp light fell on that yellow dress and made it golden. Cherry's face was pale. She raised wide, dark-fringed eyes to Dan's.

A young man said, "Cherry—!"

As often as she had rehearsed the scene to follow—as often as she had hoped for it—what happened in the next few moments was nothing whatever like Cherry's imaginings. Dan took a step forward. He held out the kitten and Cherry took it in her arms.

"Here," Dan said. "Pinky—I found him on the steps."

The words halted. The young man was looking intently at the girl's face. He did not move—not even standing inside the room. He did not try to touch Cherry but remained there staring at her.

It was the girl who recovered from her surprise first. She put a hand to her throat, smiled in a way that was not quite convincing, said in a low, throaty voice, "Thank you, Dan. I—I guess you're surprised to see me!"

He nodded. It was not Dan's voice that answered but one that was entirely strange and seemed to belong to another person.

"Yes, it is a surprise. Have you been here all the time, Cherry? I didn't know—"

"I didn't want you to. The janitor said it was all right. He let stay here. I've been down in the apartment, too—but only when I know you wouldn't be there. No one saw me. I didn't want anyone to know about it. Pinky's been here all the while but tonight he must have slipped out when I wasn't noticing."

Level glances. Level, matter-of-fact voices. And all the while the flaming, stabbing words so close to Dan's lips.

There was the briefest pause and then Phillips made a tremendous effort. He said, "Cherry—you want me to go, don't you?"

"Why, I—"

"If that's what you want I'll do the world. Pearson grinned. "Well I'll be getting along now!"

They went down to the second floor landing together. Cherry's face, smiling down over the banister, was the last thing Pearson saw before pulling down his hat brim, drawing up his coat collar and stepping out into the night.

Cherry and Dan stood before their own threshold. Dan opened the door, touched the wall switch and they entered the apartment.

"Great guy, Pearson!" he said. "But then I've always told you that."

Cherry would have gazed with him. She was about to say as much when something on the floor caught her eye. A slender, white envelope. It was lying just within the room where the janitor had slipped it underneath the door. Cherry picked it up.

"A letter!" she said. "For you, Dan. Oh, look—"

Both of them were staring at the inconspicuous lettering in the upper left hand corner of the envelope. The name was that of a famous magazine. Quickly, with a half-suppressed exclamation Dan tore open the envelope, drew out the sheet that was inside.

"Cherry!" he cried. "Why—why, Cherry—!"

He held a slip of pink paper bearing the words, "Pay to the order of Daniel Phillips, $300."

"There's some mistake," Dan was muttering. "It isn't for me, Cherry. It can't be!"

"Let's read the letter, dear."

It was a brief note. The editor was pleased to inform Daniel Phillips that his manuscript, "Night Life," had won first prize in the magazine's amateur writers' contest. The story would be published in an early issue. The letter ended with the hope that the editor might see more of Dan's work. There were the phrases, "promising," "original flavor" and "vitality."

The young man raised puzzled eyes. "But I didn't enter this contest! I didn't—"

All at once he understood. "You sent it!" he cried. "Cherry, you did this, didn't you?"

"You don't mind, do you, Dan? You see, I knew—I knew—it was a fine story. That time you asked for it—I didn't tell you the truth. I said the manuscript was lost because I didn't want to tell you I'd sent it away. Oh, I was sure it would win all the time but I wanted to know before I told you! I'm so happy, Dan. I've always known you were going to be a great writer!"

"But I'm not—I'm just a dub. Oh, but, Cherry, I'll work as I never worked before! Look—the letter says they'd like to see more of my work. They'll see plenty of it! It's—why, Cherry, this is the greatest chance of my life—I mean the real one!"

He had used those words before. He thought of Brenda. "Cherry," Dan said slowly, "chances to write stories don't mean so much. All I want is the chance to show how much I love you. How different everything is going to be for us from now on!"

The girl smiled. "We'll take that chance together, Dan. It's—the happy ending of the story."

"And the beginning of a new one!"

Then Cherry said the word that is the happiest of all endings and all beginnings. Cherry said "Yes."

The Thrill That Comes Once In A Lifetime

PA'S SON-IN-LAW

"Well, I'm certainly glad to know you're all right! Has Dan told you we've been tearing the town apart to find you? Thought you'd been kidnapped or smashed up in an accident—!"

The girl shook her head. "Dan didn't tell me," she said. Her eyes were on Dan's. The look that passed between these two was unmistakable.

Pearson coughed. "Oh, I see!" he said. "Other things to talk about. By the way, Dan, do you realize we have a taxi waiting outside?"

"Good Lord! I'd forgotten all about it!" Dan moved but the other put a hand on his arm.

"I'll take care of it," Max told him. "Got to be running along anyway. I want to get off an answer to that man."

"You mean about the job? Are you going to take it, Max?"

"Yes, I guess so. I'll be clearing out in a couple of days. See you tomorrow, Dan—"

Cherry stepped forward. She put out her hand. "We'll both see you, Max. You wouldn't leave Wellington without saying goodbye to me, would you? I thought we were friends."

Pearson's hand gripped the girl's. "Of course we are," he said. "Always!"

And that handshake, the look in Cherry Phillips' eyes meant more to Max Pearson than declarations of love from any other woman in
