Voting Shows No Spirit

WE just haven't any spirit here!"
How many students have made that statement? How many have thought it without being frank enough to express it? HOW MANY HAVE ACTUALLY DONE ANYTHING TO INCREASE THE SPIRIT?
Evidently, there are only 463 students on the campus who can answer the third question in the affirmative, for it was exactly that number, one-sixth of the total enrollment, who voted in Tuesday's Student Council election.

Of course, the poll tax regulation decreased the voting enrollees to a certain extent, but there are almost 2,000 registered voters in the college, of whom less than one-fourth had enough school spirit to cast ballots Tuesday.

This alone is sufficient evidence to incite new officers to pledge themselves to the ideal of creating enough spirit to loyalty among their constituents that the opening statement of this article cannot be repeated next year.

"SCHOOL spirit" is a nebular something that cannot be seen or defined, but when students have that spirit, its evidences are inescapable. They yell their heads of at football games, they become excited during campus political campaigns, and they vote in elections.

Student Council officers for 1936-37, THE TORRADOR congratulates you upon your election, but The TORRADOR urges you to recognize the lack of school spirit on the campus. It hopes you you will begin now with plans to increase the spirit by catching it yourselves. Talk Tech, think Tech, and advertise Tech. Then come back next year endowed with an overflowing, contagious spirit that will carry itself into the whole student body throughout the ninemonts term. If you need assistance, tell THE TORRADOR, and you will get it. And the 2,285 students who did not vote Tuesday should consider themselves disloyal to the college. Although unidentified, they are retarding the spiritual progress of Tech, If you are one of that number, you must change your stitude immediately. Tech needs your support.
