Hoover Gets Texas Votes

Local Delegates Home From Convention Of Party

MINERAL WELLS, (AP)—Texas' 49 votes were pledged in Tuesday's state Republican convention, gave President Hoover sufficient votes for renomination at the Chicago national convention next month.

John W. Philip, fourth assistant postmaster general, told the convention the country was lucky to have had Hoover as president in the present economic crisis.

Controversial issues were avoided. Some of the fourteen district women delegates were displeased over failure of a caucus to endorse Mrs. J. C. Griswold, San Antonio, for re-election as national committeewoman.

E. A. Kelley, Raymond L. Lyons, and E. E. Fahrenkamp returned home Tuesday night from Mineral Wells, where they represented Howard county in the state Republican convention.

SAN FRANCISCO, (AP)—Republican state committee members Wednesday appointed Joseph L. Scott, Los Angeles attorney, to nominate President Hoover at the Chicago national convention.

Senator Morris Sheppard, author of the eighteenth amendment, was left off the list of delegates-at-large to the national convention.

What does that mean? Are most of the Democrats of Texas favorable to repeal of the amendment or are they simply convinced that submission of the question to each state separately would be more in line with Democratic principles?

State Meeting Has Disorderly Ending After Garner Is Endorsed

HOUSTON (AP)—The Texas Democratic convention, adjourning at midnight, voted to send 184 delegates and the same number of alternates to the Chicago national convention to cast the state's 47 votes for John Garner.

The delegates are under the unit rule and instructed for Garner until released by him.

The convention named Senator Tom Connally but left Senator Morris Sheppard off the list of delegates-at-large.

In a disorderly windup of an otherwise harmonious Garner meeting the delegates voted 851 to 564 on roll call by counties declaring for approval of the question of repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the states.

HOUSTON, (AP)—The Texas state democratic convention Tuesday adopted a resolution proposing submission of the question of repeal of the 18th amendment to the various states.

The vote 551 to 564 was viva voce and the convention was thrown into disorder. Many of the delegates climbed on the stage demanding a roll call by counties.

Arithmetic In The Schools

IF any school children could have heard Dr. Robert K. Spear of New York university deliver a little speech the other night, they would have decided that they were listening to a doctrine almost too good to be true.

Dr. Spear, in the surprise of all, declared that at least 50 percent of the arithmetic taught to school children nowadays is dead wood and might as well be abandoned.

Teaching children how to extract cube roots and how to handle complex fractions, he believes, is a waste of time; and he said: "If we teach all the children the arithmetic necessary in the following actions—buying at a store, making change, reading, writing letters and traveling—we will have covered a large percentage of their total use of arithmetic."

This is all true enough. The youngster who ever has to use the more complicated arithmetical exercises, after he is out in the world, is the exception. Most of us can go through life quite happily without that sort of knowledge.

But this very quickly brings us up against that perennial problem of the schoolmaster; is the pupil to be taught only those things which will be of direct benefit to him later in life, or is he to be put through a stiff course of sprouts with the idea that the mental discipline involved is going to make his mind more capable?

Life's Darkest Moment

FROM THE FISHING CAMP BOOKLET—"AND YOU DROP EXHAUSTED INTO YOUR COMFORTABLE BED AND ARE LULLED TO SLEEP BY THE SIGHING PINES AND BALSAMS AND THE PLAINTE 'CRY OF THE WHIPPOOR-WILL'"

During the last decade or two the tendency in this country has been to emphasize the strictly utilitarian side. Latin, Greek and higher mathematics are declining, to be replaced by courses in economics and business administration.

But there is a lot to be said for the "mental discipline" idea. After all, one of the prime objects of any educational system is to teach pupils how to use their gray matter to the best advantage; and if sweating away at the intricacies of cube root or Caesar's Commentaries helps do that, the job may not be quite as useless as it looks.

SPORTS ON PARADE

By CURTIS BISHOP

Rumors of a baseball league are flying thick and fast. First Bill Fife, now Les A. James, who was the talented gentleman that coached the East Fourth Baptist basketball team into second place in the city basketball league and won a moral victory thereby, since second was no higher than they were supposed to get anyhow. James, he announces proudly, is sponsoring a ball club that can lick the socks off anything in sight. Berner Barley, who one time attended Big Spring High School and who was quite successful in at least two branches of sport, is on James' roster, as is J. C. Robinson, his basketball center, Stembridge, Wilson, Monk Pritchard, the Fairview pitcher, and etc. and so on. James in particular challenges anyone for a contest Friday.

It is probable that a meeting will be held sometime in the near future to settle the fate of the proposed circuit. Cosponsors, with its flock of Reads and Walkers, should be able to place a team in the field, and other prospective entrants are the Memphis Tigers, the oil field nine, and the high school youths. Two games a week could be played without hurting anyone except the umpires. Of course there would be such items of expense as baseball and transportation, but that should be easily arranged. One baseball is enough for nine innings. They're guaranteed for twenty-seven, aren't they?

Charles Qualls, the golfing postmaster from Post, and his not a pun either, has accepted a golf engagement at Lamona for May 30 when himself and partner will meet E. C. Nix and Frank Rose of Lamona in an exhibition match. The meeting, we learn, was arranged by the Lamona Chamber of Commerce.

Qualls defeated Rose in his march to the championship of the Big Spring Country Club tournament last summer, winning 3 up and 2 to play. The affable Lamona player was 2 down and 3 to play coming up to No. 16, and then the hard-hitting, cool-headed Qualls placed his tee shot on the green three hundred yards away. Rose also fell a victim to Qualls' determined brand of golf in the West Texas, which the Post postmaster won.

All of which reminds us of an engagement between the writer and E. C. Hankins of the Midland Reporter-Telegram sometime in the near future. Details have not been completely worked out, but should the match be played in Midland several hundred fans are expected to board a special train. The winner will challenge Prexy Anderson of Abilene for the championship of something or other.

Hankins, however, is not being white about the match. He has enlisted the services of one Sandy Auchterlonie, who formerly held the course record of the famous old St. Andrews links, and who toured the back nine of the local Country Club in something like 34 last Sunday afternoon. In the same foursome was Frank Morgan, one of Big Spring's crop of golfing youngsters, with a 39 and Mrs. Sanday with a 45. Auchterlonie (you pronounce it Sandy) performed the carving on the Howard County court house some twenty-four years ago. That was his first trade—outside of playing professional golf in the country where ten cent taxis originated.

Sandy is no stranger to the local course. Rice Institute may forfeit the Southwestern Track championship, which they won several weeks ago. Gano Pearson, who captured second place in the 3 mile event, is expected to be found ineligible, and the loss of the three points would throw the title to Texas University, who lost by the meagre margin of 1 1-2 points. It has been suggested by the Houston Post that Texas refuse to accept the title, following a precedent set in 1915 when Baylor forfeited gridiron laurels and no official champion was named. So even the Southwest Conference has their little eligibility squabbles. The proper thing would be for the University of Arkansas to take the matter into the Supreme Court.

HWARZKOPF READS CURTIS' CONFESSION TO PRESS

CLERIC IN LINDBERGH CASE

COAST GUARD SEEKS KIDNAPERS, NABS RUM RUNNERS

Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf (seated at right center, paper in hand), head of the New Jersey state police, is shown reading to newspaper men in Trenton, N. J., the confession of John Hughes Curtis, Norfolk shipbuilder, that all his "negotiations" in the Lindbergh kidnaping case were fictional.

Here is an informal picture of the Rev. H. Dobson-Peacock, New Jersey official pressed plans for questioning the Norfolk clergyman regarding his knowledge of the negotiations of John Hughes Curtis with Colonel Lindbergh.

United States coast guard boats, patrolling the Delaware capes in search of a boat linked with the Lindbergh kidnaping, captured two rum runners with 1,400 cases of liquor aboard and arrested three men. Above is shown one of the rum boats being towed up the Delaware river by a coast guard cutter.

ADMITS FAKING KIDNAP CLUES Princeton President

John Hughes Curtis, shipbuilder of Norfolk, Va., finally confessed his "negotiations" for the return of the Lindbergh baby were products of his own imagination.

Edward Dickinson Duffield of South Orange, N. J., was appointed acting president of Princeton University. He will assume office upon the retirement of John Grier Hibben in June.

CURTIS' OWN STATEMENT OF HOAX

Statement of John Hughes Curtis 704 Holgate Avenue, Norfolk, Va. Made by my own hand and own free will.

Referring to the statements made previously by me in regards to the Lindbergh Case,

At the present time I am sane, but I honestly believe that for the last seven or eight months I have not been myself, due to financial troubles.

I was apparently brought back to my senses by my telephone conversation with my wife this afternoon when she told me of the troubles she was having and how the children missed me, also by my conversation with Inspector Harry W. Walsh.

I desire to state that my remarks about the newspapers are true and can be verified, this is in reference to my story about Mr. Marshall and Mr. Miller of the Herald Tribune, Mr. Lee of the Post and Mr. Turin and Fox, offering me money of my knowledge of the Lindbergh Case or pictures of the baby.

The matter was brought to my attention during a conversation and due to what I now believe was a distorted mind by brooding over it, I became insane of the subject for the time being, which caused me to create the story in its entirety, which was untrue in every respect.

I never knew such people that I named as Colonel Lindbergh and they were creatures of a distorted mind, with the exception of Morris Crossdale, who had no connection with the crime.

I exceedingly regret that I caused Colonel Lindbergh and others any inconvenience and wish it were in my power to correct my wrong.

In justice to my wife and two children I trust that it is in the power of Colonel Lindbergh to forgive the inconvenience, worry and injustice I did him in his time of grief.

This statement has been brought about by the realization of the wrong I have done.

SUSAN CARRY, 20 and beautiful, is secretly in love with BOB DUNBAR, millionaire's son. DENISE ACKROYD, who wants Bob for herself, plots to separate them. Susan has been engaged to her former employer, ERNEST HEATH, but Heath overheard a conversation between her and Bob and asked her to break the engagement. She finds Bob as he is boarding a train for New York and there is a reconciliation. Bob tells his father he is going to marry Susan and the elder Dunbar is furious. The father goes to see Susan and tells her it will ruin Bob's life if she marries him. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLVI

"That's exactly what I mean," said Mrs. Dunbar. The faintest smile of regret tinged her voice. Susan sat silent, her hands locked in her lap. Her mind was in confusion. Yesterday everything had been clear sailing. It had all sounded so simple, so easy. Even Bob's report of his father's anger had had a far-away, unreal aspect. Older people were always troubling themselves about things that really didn't matter. Susan had thought, stocks and bonds, houses and money. What did they count when weighed against her love for Bob? Bob had agreed with her. They would be married very quietly. He had an offer of a job on a ranch in Montana. Some man he had known at college was experimenting with wheat and there was a little tenant house they could have. Susan had thought of herself simply and joyously as a farmer's wife. It had all seemed quite idyllic. Now this large-eyed old man with his talk of inheritances had come to spoil everything.

She felt a little sick as she listened to him. His voice rumbled on smoothly and persuasively.

"I know you wouldn't want to stand in his way—we all go through these puppy love affairs—"

She felt in a daze. Was it true that her love for Bob would bring him only unhappiness and ill fortune? Would he be tired of poverty and of her with it? The poison of the older man's cunning words had reached her heart. Perhaps she and Bob had been fools. Perhaps she had been wrong to think that life could be so simple and straight-forward as they, in their roomy cream, had visioned it. Through her misery dawned the realization that her father had repeated a question she had asked her eyes clouded with painful repentment.

"I beg your pardon, I'm afraid I wasn't listening."

He said, "I will make it worth your while if you let him go."

"Oh!" All the pain and wound of pride of the girl surged to the surface. She stood up proudly and then crouched. She said in a voice that trembled, "I think you'd better let me before I say something in regret. After all, you are Bob's father."

He was won to reluctant admiration but he could not leave without attempting to justify himself. His carefully measured sentences flowed on. Susan stared at a point some inches over the man's head and family is frightfully rich. His father is going to cut him off with a cent if he insists on marrying me."

Ray gasped. "It's just like in the movies!" he exclaimed.

Susan rushed on, eager to unburden herself. "Well, that was all right. We talked it over and he didn't care and I certainly don't. But today his father came to see me and said I'd be ruining his son's whole life if I married him. Her voice broke. "I don't know. It's sort of—got me. I don't know what to do."

Susan fought a battle with herself that morning. Bob was to come at eight and through alternate chills and fevers she tried to make up her mind what to say to him when he arrived. She had explained to Aunt Jessie who had remained singularly unmoved by the news of the girl's change of plan that the caller had been Bob's father. Aunt Jessie had tactfully refrained from asking questions. She had seemed gentle since her illness. Aunt Jessie was looking forward to making a long visit to her sister who lived in southern Illinois.

"I'm going for a walk," Susan told her abruptly a few minutes later. Scarcely conscious of the direction she was taking, she boarded a street car headed for the business district. She must do something. She must keep active. She stopped at a drug store telephone booth and called Ray Flannery.

"Well, stranger, where have you been keeping yourself?" Ray demanded. "I've missed you like the dickens."

"Can you have lunch with me?" Susan asked. Ray agreed with enthusiasm. Half an hour later over the square, white-topped table in a sweet shop Ray stared at Susan with frank interest.

"Come into money or something?" she wanted to know. Susan tried to explain. Her aunt had been ill, she said vaguely, and she had been needed at home. Ray seemed satisfied with this answer.

"Say, the new girl in Heath's office sure is a lemon," Ray commented. "She looks like something the cat dragged in."

Susan smiled. She had heard about Miss Smith from Jack Waring, but Ray's description seemed unkindly harsh.

"The old man's gone away, I hear," Ray rambled on. "What do you know about that?"

Susan flushed. "He was talking about making a trip before I left," she said evasively.

"I don't know. I always kind of thought he was buzzing around you," said Ray.

Susan changed the subject but not for long because inevitably with Ray the talk turned to men and romance. Ray was never interested in abstractions. After a little sparring Susan burst out with the question closest to her heart.

"What do you think—I mean what would you do if you were going to marry a person and someone told you you'd be spoiling his life by doing it?" she floundered.

Ray's shrewd eyes searched her face. "What are you talking about? I don't get you."

Susan began to outline little squares and triangles on the table's gleaming surface with her spoon.

"It's this way," she said. "I'm engaged—it's a secret and you mustn't tell anyone—to a boy whose

"You're willing to take him with you the money?" asked Ray.

"Willing!" Susan was frankly honest. "I was glad when he told me it was going to be that way. I thought it gave us a better chance to make a go of it. But now I'm not certain. He's always been rich and maybe he'd be lost without all the things he's been used to. Maybe he'd blame me for being the cause of his breaking away from his family and friends. I couldn't stand that," she finished wearily.

Ray planted her two small fists on the table. "You listen to me!" she said. "Don't be a fool! 'I want to do what's right,' Susan insisted.

Ray's doll-face with its fringed, massaged lashes and its tuft of yellow curling hair looked unbecomingly childlike. The words which issued from those pointed lips, however, were unmistakably adult.

"Don't do as I did," Ray reminded her bitterly. "Don't let your one chance of happiness go and be sorry for it." She was thinking of Sky Webb, of course, and the rich girl he'd married.

"You know how I used to rave," Ray continued. "All about an apartment on the drive and a mink coat and what-not. That," Ray told her, "was all the bunk. I was kidding myself. We'd always been poor, mamma and I, and I said to myself I was tired of it. When Sky asked me to run off with him I gave him a lot of smart talk about what I had to have before I'd coddle down. He took it seriously, and the first thing I knew he'd gone off and teamed up with that other girl."

Susan had been listening seriously. When Ray finished and tapped into a fit of musing Susan said, "Of course our problems aren't all the same. I wouldn't mind being poor and Bob knows it. What I want to be sure of is what will make him happy?"

Ray smiled. "I'm telling you don't be like that! Take your chances and see what comes. You don't want to be an old maid all your life, do you?"

The two girls, so absurdly young, both sobered at the thought.

"Of course you don't," Ray went on. "Then grab this boy—I don't know who he is—he must be ok. If you like him—before something happens. We're all such fools," said Ray wistfully. "Life is so short we have to take chances. That's the only way to find out what it's all about."

She gathered up her gloves. Ray sighed. "When this is a warm day for March!" She was trying to divert the conversation into lighter channels. "Doesn't it make you want to get out of this man's laws to some place where you can see the sky?"

"Of course you don't," Ray went on. "Then grab this boy—I don't

Home Town

Viewed strictly from a political standpoint with reference to effect of the convention's action upon the candidacy of John Garner for the presidential nomination, it appears his chances at Chicago will be improved by the referendum support in his home state.

With the Texas delegation of 184, with 48 votes, in the convention pledged to support Garner and a liquor referendum it is pretty certain that the number of second-choice votes for Garner will be raised materially, especially in delegations from states containing the nation's largest cities.

If Roosevelt can be stopped short of the necessary two-thirds majority and the convention goes into a second phase to decide who shall be the second choice of a majority of those supporting Roosevelt at the outset, Garner will be a better-than-even bet for the nomination.

Whether Democrats of Texas would go to the polls and vote for a native son running on a platform containing a referendum plank is another question.

We wonder how many other counties were in the position of Howard when the roll call vote on the referendum was taken. Howard, with six votes, had but one vote in the convention, insofar as we can learn. One of Howard's six delegates sent his proxy to J. E. Adams, national committeeman for Texas. The others forgot or neglected to do so, unless we are misinformed. There were no Howard county delegates in attendance. But the Howard county delegation was pledged to a dry plank in the state platform, also pledged to John Garner.

Another interesting matter will be the effect of the referendum vote by his home state upon the political future of Senator Morris Sheppard. He has been accused widely in the past few years of neglecting other important legislation and putting practically all of his thought and effort into prohibition alone.

It is not improbable that Mr. Sheppard will confront a much stronger opposition for another term than in a number of years. A wild guess is that Dan Moody may seek a U. S. senate seat. However, Moody was quoted Tuesday as saying he believes the state convention ought to "lay off" any election on the prohibition question. He was reported to have taken no part in the convention.

Which brings to mind what Dan said to your correspondent a few days before his nomination for a second term as governor. Bouncing over likely roads at one o'clock in the morning, after having pulled Nolan, Fisher and Jones county mud all day to deliver four speeches, Dan said "well, after Saturday night when I end this campaign in Waco, I hope I never make another speech for myself for public office. I like to make 'em for the other fellow but I hope never to seek public office again for myself."

He demonstrated two years ago in his campaign for Ross Sterling that he liked to make 'em and in our guess that he will mount a few stumps this summer for Mr. Sterling. But we can't help but believe that if Dan figured the time was ripe he would seek to go to the senate. Fact is, it is not very improbable that he could not be induced to run for governor again some time.

The chief factor that would serve to keep him out of politics for himself is that his law practice since leaving the governor's office has been very gratifying. Which goes to show that those of his friends who persuaded him not to seek a third term were right when they advised that he'd better forget being governor at $2,500 a year and garner what he could easily receive as a practicing attorney. Dan cannot out of the office much poorer than when he was first elected.

Sterling is ending his first term very much poorer than when he was elected. While Dan had practically nothing to begin with he was in debt when he retired. Sterling's large fortune has disappeared under stress of the times and while he was unable to do duties of public office to devote his undivided interest to his own interests.

We recall an instance when the board of control told Mrs. Moody to make out a list of some things that were needed in the governor's mansion. She did. When the list came before Dan for approval before being submitted to the board of control for payment he was wanted to know what use the state of Texas had for six salad molds, one of the items. He just marked it out along with some other items and paid for it himself.

Debate Report

Mrs. Sarah Hughes, assistant secretary of the convention, began reading the committee report on delegates to the national convention. The report was adopted.

Mrs. Hughes of Dallas moved adjournment but Brown held him out and ordered a roll call.

Pinckney appealed from the chairman's decision to order a roll call.

Congressman Sam Rayburn of Bonham, close personal friend of John Garner, speaker of the national house of representatives who had been given the convention's 48 votes in the national convention, was on the stage. He refused to take a hand in the situation and said he did not want to discuss the development.

Pinckney later withdrew his motion to appeal and insisted that a motion to adjourn be put on the floor.

The convention voted to give the state's 48 votes in the national convention to John N. Garner for president and to "vote for none other under any circumstances, until released by him."

To Vote as Unit

The Texas legislation was instructed to vote as a unit upon all questions coming before the convention.

An amendment proposing that the delegation not be required to stay with Garner until released by him personally was voted down after a controversial floor fight. The convention was in wild disorder while proponents of the amendment attempted to speak on the proposition.

It was indicated that a part of the convention did not want to commit Texas to a second choice. J. C. Adams of Dallas was re-elected Texas national committeeman over A. J. Wirtz of Seguin, former state senator. The wet and dry issue had been injected into that election, Wirtz being an outspoken advocate of repeal of the 18th amendment.

Liberals Lose Keynote

The liberals also lost in an effort to name one of its group temporary chairman and keynote of the convention when Congressman Sam Rayburn of Bonham was chosen over C. I. Francis of Wichita Falls. Rayburn is director of the Garner campaign in the nation.

Those opposing Rayburn charged he had been put forward through "machine political manipulations." The liberals first planned to press the election of W. K. Gonzalez, advocate of repeal of the 18th amendment, but later decided to support Francis, who is a conservative with reference to prohibition.

Hopkins Withdraws

Hopkins, finally decided to remove himself from consideration and he and his adherents got behind Francis.

Rayburn was given the undivided support of a conservative group in the party that had been working for weeks to keep any controversy capital and member of the reconstruction finance corporation, were read. When Sheppard's wire was read there were scattered hoots.

Escorted to Chair

The details clear away, Rayburn was escorted to the chair. "We must have our little differences and our little arguments," he said in beginning his keynote speech, "but I know we are going ahead as one man from here on out."

"Three months ago in San Antonio was started an organization, that is to say speaking of business men upon the white-collar class were concerned about whether an income of $300,000 paid $77,940 under the Committee Bill or $101,080 under the Couzens amendment. The real burden of the Couzens amendment would have fallen on incomes between $7,000 and $50,000, that is to say upon the business men upon the white-collar class, upon executives, upon the professional class. There are, by and large, the same people who pay the bulk of the states income taxes and of local taxes in cities.

The fact that the support of the Couzens amendment came almost entirely from agricultural states raises the question as to why the Senators from these regions were so ready to impose severe taxes on small and moderate earnings. The answer, it seems to me, is to be found in the difference between incomes in the form of money and in the form of kind. The farmer, on the average, has a much smaller money income than the city man. But it is by no means certain that he has a lower standard of life. For a great many of the things, including food, fresh air, recreation, which the city man has to pay for in dollars the farmer obtains without the use of money. Now the income tax reaches only money incomes. Hence it is the city man who is the chief income tax payer even though his real income—measured in terms of food, light, air and even security in time of depression—may be much less than if he lived on the land.

I venture to suggest that this is the real reason why Britain is almost the only county which manages to support its government out of income taxes. Britain is the most highly industrialized country in the world, and that means that the great bulk of British incomes come from agricultural sources. To other countries that I know of I am able to make the income tax work as it works in Britain. Everywhere else, in France, in Canada, in Australia, the income tax has to be supplemented by consumption taxes of one kind or another. It is hard to believe that this difference between British and all other countries is due solely to the extraordinary fiscal patriotism of the British people. The Canadians are of the same stock and have the same traditions. The true reason, it seems to me, is that in countries which are agrarian, the income tax alone does not reach a sufficient part of the real income of the people.

If this is a correct interpretation of the matter, it will go a long way towards explaining why, in the alignment of Congress, it was the agricultural Senators who wished to put the whole burden on money incomes and why the industrial Senators opposed them.

The immediate problem, of course, is to raise money where it can most readily be found. Senator Couzens, relying on the Congressional statisticians, thinks that the 1918 rates would raise $381,000,000 more than the Committee rates. The Treasury statisticians say they would raise only $193,000,000 more. The real point is that neither schedule of rates will raise enough money to bring the budget into balance. The inescapable fact remains that at the bottom of the depression the income tax alone is not productive enough. The money incomes of the income taxpayers have declined too drastically.

Therefore, an honest effort to balance the budget must include, unless there are economies beyond anything now discussed, a new source of taxation. Tariffs cannot provide it for when tariffs become prohibitive they cease to yield revenues. There is nothing left to tax but consumption. The choice here is between high consumption taxes on a narrow list of articles and low consumption taxes on a broad list. If it is certainly of expense that is most important, a low tax on a broad list clearly a low tax on a broad list clearly.

Revolt of 1928

Revolt of Texas Democrats in 1928, when the Lone Star state voted for a republican presidential nominee, was injected into the afternoon debate.

Hecklers wanted to know how State Senator Walter Woodward political friend of Governor R. S. Sterling and advocates of Rayburn, stood in 1928 and he was asked from the floor if he were wet or dry. They also asked how Rayburn had conducted himself with reference to the 1928 deflection.

Mrs. Hughes of Dallas and Amon G. Carter of Fort Worth joined Woodward in seconding Rayburn's nomination. Senator Hopkins, Senator T. J. Holbrook of Galveston and Pinckney spoke for Francis. Sentiment in the convention was highly partisan as the speeches proceeded and no one escaped hecklers.

Rayburn's Address

Rayburn stirred the convention to enthusiasm in his keynote address when he said John Garner could obtain more votes than any other Democrat.

He said Garner would be the second choice of more delegates in the Chicago convention than any other candidate. He said Garner's leadership and statesmanship had caught the imagination of the people.

As the afternoon session of the convention opened, enthusiasm seemed to be waning a trifle so the band struck up Dixie and had the delegates shouting and flinging their hats.

TODAY and TOMORROW

By WALTER LIPPMANN The Burden of Taxation

The most decisive test of sentiment in the Senate thus far was the vote which defeated the Couzens amendment. This was a compromise rate—the highest war-time rate—those which were demanded under the Revenue Act of 1918. The general impression is that this was a measure aimed at the very rich, and it is known as the "soak the rich" amendment. An examination of the proposal will show that as compared with the Committee Bill the increase would have been considerable for incomes of $70,000 and over, but the really drastic increases would have been imposed on incomes from $2,000 up to $70,000. This under the Senate Committee Bill is a rate whereas under the Committee amendment it would pay $80. The Couzens amendment would have multiplied the lowest taxes fifteen times, medium taxes about twice, the moderately large taxes about once and a half, and the very largest about half. The Couzens amendment would, it is estimated, have raised the number of returns from 2,711,533 under the present law to 7,125,035.

The alignment of the Senators on the Couzens amendment was substantially that between the agrarian states and the industrial states. Of the thirty-one votes cast for it my impression is that the great bulk, more than twenty-five, came from states west of the Mississippi and south of the Potomac. There were votes cast against the amendment by Senators from this region but there were not half a dozen votes cast for it by Senators from the industrial regions of the North and East.

How is such a vote to be interpreted? It seems to me entirely misleading to suppose that the Senators from the states where there are big manufacturing cities were concerned about whether an income of $300,000 paid $77,940 under the Committee Bill or $101,080 under the Couzens amendment. The real burden of the Couzens amendment would have fallen on incomes between $7,000 and $50,000, that is to say upon the business men upon the white-collar class, upon executives, upon the professional class. There are, by and large, the same people who pay the bulk of the states income taxes and of local taxes in cities.

Crude Stored In West Texas Off In March

27,565,271 Barrels Empty At End Of Month, Report Shows

Oil runs through pipe lines from West Texas during March totaled 5,029,955 barrels, an increase of 441,110 barrels over February, while crude stocks declined 260,107 barrels to 24,980,645 barrels. This left over for 27,565,271 barrels, total storage capacity being 51,645,919 barrels.

Part of the increase in pipe line runs during March was due to the fact that the month had 31 days whereas February had but 29. Pipe line runs during March averaged 181,611 barrels compared with 179,926 barrels during February, a daily average gain of 2,685 barrels.

Total pipe line runs by counties during March were:

and really mean to balance the budget, it seems to me, compelled to give up the notion that the issue in Washington is between something like the war-time taxes and the sales tax. If we really mean to balance the budget, we shall unhappily need both. Even then it might be doubted whether the budget would be in exact balance. But if all the revenues of the people are tapped by taxation, the object of the whole effort to balance the budget will have been achieved. The wealth of the nation will have been pledged to maintain its credit.

It is a hard project. The truth is bitter. It may be that this medicine is too strong to be swallowed at one gulp. But unless there is a marvelous change for the better, it is difficult to see how we can avoid coming to it next winter. To refuse to look the prospect in the face is to deceive ourselves.
