Dash discusses privacy

Samuel Dash, special counsel to the Senate Watergate Committee, spoke on the 'Right of Privacy' in the Lubbock Auditorium Thursday night. Dash appeared as the first of six lecturers being brought to campus during the 1974-75 academic year under auspices of the Speakers' Series.

Watergate counsel urges vigilance to prevent future abuses of power

By BOB HANNAN
UD Reporter

Samuel Dash, the former chief counsel to the Watergate Committee, Thursday urged his audience to remain "vigilant" and insure that the government remains responsive.

The outcome of the Watergate affair is evidence the United States' system of government works, he said, but the government "will only continue to work if you keep alive and awake." The U.S. came terribly close to losing its form of government during Watergate, he said. "Let's never be caught asleep or afraid."

Dash expressed his deep respect for today's youth, and said, "I would therefore urge young people to be really turned on to what they see before their eyes."

"What I suggest is to speak up and to speak up in great numbers," he said.

Dash's announced topic had been "The Right of Privacy," but most of his remarks concerned Watergate.

Watergate has awakened an air of vigilance in the country, and the reaction to Watergate proved the public is concerned, he said.

After the Saturday Night Massacre,

"President Nixon found that his Silent Majority would speak up, and loudly," Dash said. President Ford has discovered the effect of public opinion also, Dash said, as Ford was "stung" by the public reaction to Nixon's pardon.

Other than an aroused public, Dash said, there are no safeguards against a future Watergate. Legislation is a blunt instrument, he said.

But Watergate has been a lesson for politicians, he said. Office-holders have watched the fall of officials of the highest rank. The end results were drastic, Dash said, and the results will have an impact for years to come.

"Many politicians are looking at things through 'post-Watergate' morality," he said. The politicians are realizing they can't get away with something if the public talks back, he said.

Now, what the public wants in an office-holder is honesty, morality and integrity, he said, not necessarily competence.

Dash began his presentation by referring to actions of Attorney General William Saxbe. Saxbe has recently called for broader wiretapping powers.

Dash termed the request shocking in light of Watergate.

Saxbe wants to turn the clock back and wiretap without suspicion, Dash said. The misconception of power in the Nixon White House (that the president had absolute power and was not subject to court power) led to the misuse of wiretapping by former Attorney General John Mitchell, said Dash.

Dash was a member of a committee that recommended the government's wiretapping power be restricted. "We realized the chilling effect of Big Brother listening in can only diminish the quality of life in America," he said. Dash also gave some insight into the workings of the Watergate Committee.

The committee employed "no razzle-dazzle, no Perry Mason methods," he said, just "plain, hard work." The committee did use a computer, however, and what Dash called satellite charts.

All information concerning the case was fed into the computer and Dash said the computer was "an excellent investigative device."

The satellite charts depicted all persons around principals in the case (H. R. Haldeman, or John Ehrlichman). Then, the satellites would be subpoenaed and detailed information about their superiors could be obtained.

Economic chairman says inflation hits Wall Street hardest

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new chairman of President Ford's Council of Economic Advisers (CEA) suggested Thursday that inflation was hurting Wall Street brokers proportionately more than the nation's poor.

The statement by Alan Greenspan drew jeers and boos from many of the 180 delegates to a government-sponsored mini-summit conference on health, education and welfare inflation.

There were few positive solutions to inflation offered at the conference.

Greenspan was asked by trade unionists in the audience whether the Ford administration wasn't making the poor suffer "a bit more" to make life easier for manufacturers and the upper class.

"Everybody is hurt by inflation," Greenspan declared.

"If you really want to examine who, percentage-wise, is really hurt the most in these incomes, it's Wall Street brokers," he said. "I mean, their incomes have gone down the most."

Many of the delegates jumped to their feet in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare auditorium, voicing catcalls, boos, jeers and hisses.

"That's the whole trouble with this administration — Wall Street brokers," shouted an unidentified man in the back of the audience.

At the conclusion of his address, Greenspan was applauded. But after the delegates broke up into smaller sessions, Greenspan's remarks were criticized again.

"This incredible man who heads the CEA equates that some Wall Street financiers eat less steak and drink less champagne with poor people who have to eat dog food and finally the dog," said Joseph E. Lowery of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"When stockbrokers' income drops from $60,000 to $25,000, they don't go hungry," added Rhoda Karparkin of the Consumers Union.

Greenspan painted a dreary picture of the state of the nation's economy, saying that he knows no one "who looks on the outlook over the next six or nine months with any degree of optimism."

Virtually all of the delegates, representing about 60 major national organizations, said they opposed federal budget cuts to fight inflation, and some spoke of support for increased federal spending.

Only general solutions to inflation were put forth. Instead, there were suggestions on how to cope with depression. The AFL-CIO, for example, suggested expanded unemployment insurance.

A coalition of organizations including the NAACP recommended tax reform to plug loopholes in special tax shelters to help raise the necessary revenue.

Rash of thefts, auto burglaries spur warning for extra caution

A rash of thefts and auto burglaries in the Wiggins dorm complex prompted University police to issue a warning Monday for students who park in that area to take extra care locking up their belongings.

Lt. R. T. Hamilton said eight-track tape cartridges are especially popular targets for thieves, and that anywhere from 20 to 100 tapes have been stolen from individual cars.

"The thieves don't seem to be as interested in the tape players themselves," Hamilton said. He said students should either take valuables into their rooms or lock them in their car trunks.

Formerly drug crisis center Third Nail offers drug counseling

By MELISSA GRIGGS
UD Reporter

"The Third Nail," the name given the small frame house at 2408 13th St., replaces the former Drug Crisis Center at the same address. But more has changed than the name.

As the Human Development Center takes over the operation of the house, professional therapists will be available on a free basis to help sort out any problems brought to them, drug-related or otherwise.

In addition to professional supervision, The Third Nail will differ from the Drug Crisis Center through more extensive training of volunteers and financial stability.

When the Drug Crisis Center was begun in September 1970, it was the first agency of its type in the West Texas area. "We feel it is still the most effective type of agency for dealing with any type of drug problem," said Richard Whitehead, director of the center.

The Human Development Center, located at 1210 Texas Ave., is the outpatient arm of the Lubbock Regional Mental Health-Mental Retardation program. The Third Nail's connection with the Human Development Center was made possible by federal and state grants in July, 1974.

"We are now better prepared for emergencies," said Whitehead. "If, for instance, someone is ODing (suffering from an overdose of drugs), we can rush them to St. Mary's for care. We can pay all the necessary expenses if the patient is unable to do so, too."

The name, "The Third Nail," was selected by workers at the center. It is the name of a drug center in California. "The name has no real meaning," said Whitehead. "We just wanted something thought-provoking to arouse curiosity."

The Third Nail was originally opened by people who previously used drugs and wanted to help their friends who were having drug problems. It has been located several places before the University Ministries offered its current building two years ago.

The majority of The Third Nail volunteers are Tech students. "Since ours is not a long-term therapy, the volunteers must be up on treatment counseling to refer people with drug problems to the proper place to help them get off and stay off drugs," said Whitehead.

The Third Nail's volunteers will suggest other therapy, for example, family therapy, if the problem isn't really drugs.

"Drug use is usually an indicator that something else is wrong," said Milt Kelly, Intake Counselor for the Human Development Center. "Most drug problems have emotional or psychological problems rooted in parent-child relationships."

"Parents have the idea that drugs are the cause of problems," said Kelly. "We try to get them to see that drug abuse is usually the result of a problem. 'You don't see families where parents and children have good communication have any problems with drug abuse.'"

"We would really like to formulate more growth and encounter groups," said Whitehead. "These groups teach people to communicate and that is the main problem we find — that people just don't know how to communicate."

"We really hope to reach more people in the Black and Chicano communities," said Whitehead. "It is so hard to change the image we seem to have as being white middle class. Many of the minorities feel left out and either don't trust us or don't know about us."

"We especially need recruits from these areas. It seems they would want to help their own kind. Many of the volunteers have a definite communication problem here because they simply don't know the language of the street users."

With help from more volunteers, the center hopes to stay open 24 hours a day.

"In training the volunteers, we emphasize two major areas, counseling skills and being able to supply specific drug information," said Kelly. "Both are necessary when a counselor is trying to help someone and evaluate what the problem is."

The training program for volunteers varies with individuals but on the average, lasts about six weeks. "There is no structured training program as such. If a new recruit has enough knowledge about drug counseling, we could put him on the phone right off," said Whitehead.

Other Third Nail workers in addition to Whitehead and Kelly are Jan Johnson, project coordinator, and Bob Welsh, counselor. A board of directors advises the center, as does an executive committee consisting of Jerry Cox, in charge of training; Jim Burnham, education and Helen Ver Duin, staff relations.

New drug center

The Third Nail, is the new but admittedly unmeaningful name given the drug crisis center. The center is located in an old house on Broadway and offers help to persons with drug or other problems.

Senators pass budget

In major action Thursday night, the Tech Student Senate passed the organizational budget and refused to confirm appointees to the Supreme Court. A full report of Senate activity will appear in Monday's University Daily.

House investigating alcoholic commission

AUSTIN (AP) — A House subcommittee looking into the practices and policies of the Texas Alcoholic Beverages Commission (ABC) said late Thursday they will hold a public hearing Sept. 27 in Dallas.

The public is invited to testify, said Rep. Frank Lombardio, D-San Antonio, chairman.

The subcommittee was created, Lombardio said, in response to criticism of the ABC and is investigating commission rules and policies, enforcement practices, procedures in notifying licensees of their rights and responsibilities, hearing procedures, and other matters.

Cancer risk high for roadside dwellers

NEW YORK (AP) — Living in a house by the side of the road might hold the risk of having cancer as an uninvited guest, a Swiss physician reports. Dr. Walter Blumer of Netstal, Switzerland, said he had 75 patients who died of cancers over a 12-year period, and 72 of them had lived within 50 yards of a state highway carrying 5,000 vehicles a day through Netstal.

Freshman cheerleaders selected

Six new freshmen cheerleaders were selected from a field of about 70 participants during try-outs conducted from 5 to 9 p.m., Monday in the Intramural Gym.

The new yell leaders include Bobby Braus, Gary Matlack, Eloy Villafraanca, Susan Robinson, Janie France and Rhonda Foster.

Fair opens Saturday

The Panhandle South Plains Fair, opening Saturday, will include four special days among the regular calendar of activities. The fair will continue through Saturday, Sept. 28.

General Manager Steve L. Lewis said the 57th annual exposition will include area school day on Monday, Sept. 23; Lubbock school days on Sept. 24-25; senior citizens' day, Thursday, Sept. 26, and military day, Friday, Sept. 27. All college students will be admitted free on College Day, Sept. 28.

Traditionally, area school day is the first Monday of the Fair because of the Parade of Bands, which draws approximately three dozen South Plains and eastern New Mexico bands. This year cash premiums have been boosted by $1,000.

Four Fair Park Coliseum stage shows are scheduled during the eight-day run. The lineup includes:

Sept. 21-22 — Loretta Lynn, tickets $3, $4 and $5.
Sept. 23-24 — Charley Pride, tickets $4, $5 and $6.
Sept. 25-26 — Mel Tillis, tickets $3, $4 and $5.
Sept. 27-28 — The Emmet Kelly Jr. one-ring circus, tickets $3, $4, $5.

TerHorst stepped out gracefully

Robert Montemayor

THE RECENT RESIGNATION by White House press secretary Jerry terHorst seems to have lost much of its grace because of the many other pressing matters at hand. However, to me that resignation had much social as well as political impact.

It has given the American public the hope that there are people in Washington who do their own thinking and consider the circumstances and do not solely serve their leaders with a blind irrationality.

It has given the American public the hope that we do indeed have a stock of fine-brand public servants who will in the very near future lead us away from Watergate.

Certainly the Watergate affair still clings in our minds, and I agree that it has been played, replayed and overplayed, but the decision by terHorst to split the sheets with the White House is one that should be welcomed by pride and pleasure by us all.

He was not trying to be some kind of self declaring martyr by his actions. But rather, terHorst weighed President Ford's decision to grant a pardon to former President Richard Nixon very carefully. He did not simply do as a Ronald Ziegler would have done ... saying nothing, thinking nothing and totally accepting the rationale of the President.

He did not even stage his resignation as a gala affair for everyone to cheer about. And he did not part with any viciousness in his mind, much less the thought of degrading the President.

What he did was silently step out and, in a private manner, protest his disapproval of President Ford's pardon to Nixon. He felt his principles were being taken to the limits and rather than raise a stink, he returned his job and its title back to the President.

Of course, there have been those tolerable people who have rationalized themselves into believing that theirs was simply to stay silent and loyal ... to believe that their position and their value to its system was all but indispensable. TerHorst at least had the courage to value his principles and quite gracefully step out.

He did not want to be looked down upon by his peers. He did not want to have to walk and be seen as a robot or zombie of the White House. And he did not want to face his children and give them loaded answers about his job and its merits.

I admire the Jerry terHorsts who can think before they react, who can logically and rationally reason the questions at hand and not feel guilty afterwards about their decisions.

He stood up for what he strongly believed and he asked no one for permission to do so. Jerry terHorst has given the American public the hope for principles being upheld and the optimism that someday we will attain a level of honest and truthful government.

SOMEBODY HAS BEEN spreading the nasty rumor that I won't print letters contradicting my point of views. I've said it once and I'll say it again. This is your newspaper.

I do have an open editorial policy ... practically everything goes, good or bad. If you have the slightest notion to write a letter knocking me, do so. I am fair and I don't like the idea being given that I won't listen and hear you out. My job is exactly that — to listen and hear you out. Write and you'd be surprised what results you get.

DON'T BE SURPRISED if the University Center jacks up its prices on its events, services and games sometime in the near future.

Just like the rest of the world, the University Center does have to contend with inflation and salary increases. The salary increases are what's looming in the background.

Nelson Longley, University Center director, said "we're in for real trouble if we don't."

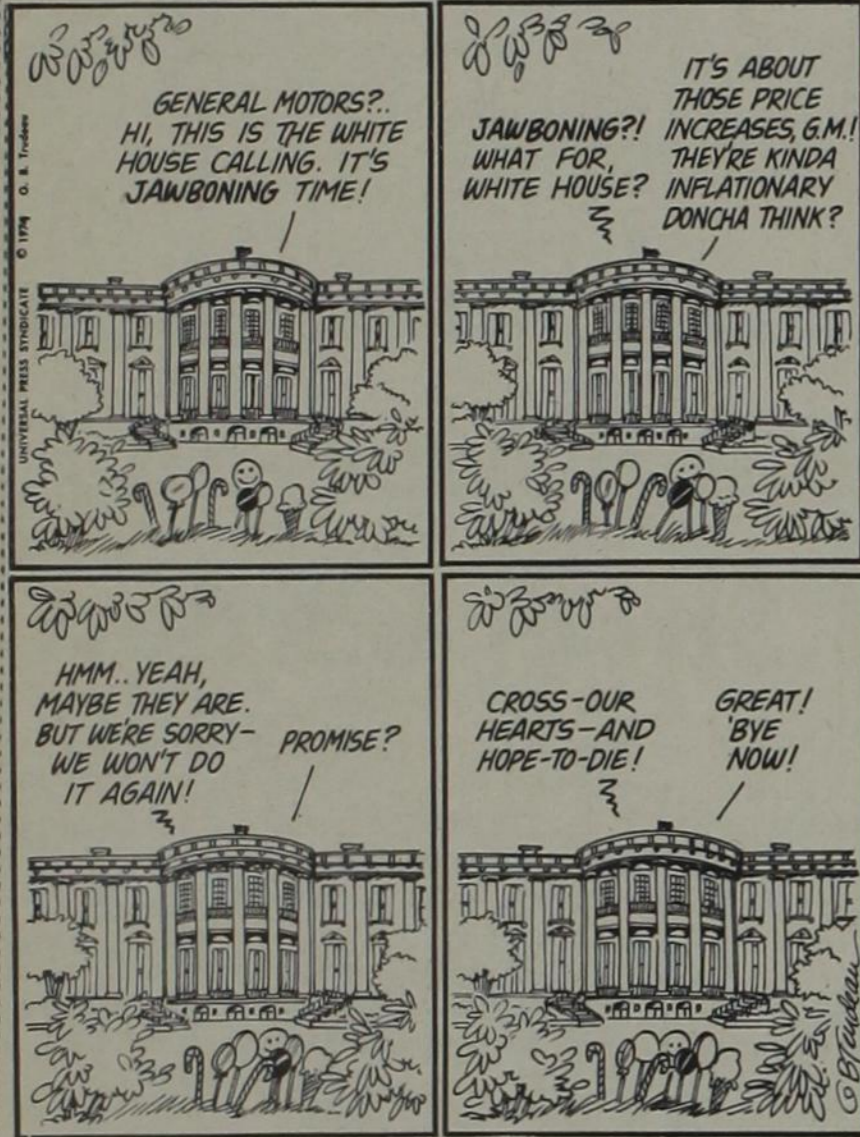

It seems the governor and lieutenant governor are both favoring across the board raises for university personnel toward the end of this year. The raises, according to Longley, could be in the 10 per cent range.

If that's so, we're talking about 10 per cent of $179,000, the figure the University Center works with. This will amount in a $17,900 increase. Presently the University Center Board Committee is studying the problem and is expected to find the additional money.

MAYBE REGISTRAR D. N. Peterson should take notice of the Commuters Association at the University of Maryland. The Association offered students a diversion from the heat and tedium of registration by providing a cold beer truck vending truck and arranging to have the local fire department spray a mound of foam for students to frolic in. Have a good day.

to the editor

Thanks for being merciful, Kay

To the Editor: Apparently, there must be some blind patriotism going around this campus, especially that which suggested by Kay Miller in her letter of Sept. 18.

In her letter, Kay claims that those Americans that oppose the Nixon pardon are blind, stupid, very biased, and vindictive. Most American people, however, are only asking for due process of law. Is this too much to ask for? To us, it seems that the best interests of the country lies in following that due process.

But that is not the crux of our argument. The thing that peevs us even more is Kay's quote: "They call Nixon a criminal: And yet they think nothing of Edward Kennedy having murdered a girl and getting away 'scot-free.'" How can one person be so hypocritical! She is furious because the American people crucify Nixon before he has been brought to trial, and then turns around and bluntly pegs Edward Kennedy a murderer. Kennedy, likewise, never went to trial. To us, this idea lacks a justifiable amount of intelligence.

Art student wants "free environment"

To the Editor: Ref: "Junction center provides unique class environment," University Daily, 12 Sept. 74.

If the Art Department of Texas Tech University can offer a stimulating "free environment" for a small number of summer students in an off-campus area, then the same art faculty should be able to offer an even better environment on the actual campus of the university for students ten times in number.

UC brings back 'Godfather' in its epic entirety

By WILLIAM D. KERNS
Fine Arts Editor

On April 5, 1972, I wrote a monstrosously long review of Francis Ford Coppola's THE GODFATHER; it was a film which struck me right away as an epic, a film worthy of many words. In my opening paragraph, I introduced the picture as one which would probably sweep the 1973 Academy Awards; well,

"Cabaret" turned out to be the big winner, but "The Godfather" still copped the major Oscars for Best Picture and Best Actor.

Then, about a month ago, it was announced that NBC had paid something like $10 million for the rights to show the epic film this coming Nov. 16 and 18. Of course, Paramount is trying to milk the film dry and has it in general re-release now ... but they really shouldn't worry.

For TV can promise nothing but butchery ... and the cuts of the television censor are, in this critic's opinion, sure to change the scope of the entire picture. For this reason, I strongly urge you to take advantage of this weekend's opportunity to see the film in its entirety at the University Center. It will be shown at 6 and 9:15 p.m. Friday, and again at 7 p.m. Sunday in the UC Ballroom. Following are excerpts from my original review:

Gutsy, thought-out, dramatic ... you choose the admiring description and this is the picture to which it will be linked. "The Godfather" is nothing short of a masterpiece, the epic gangster picture. It is brilliant cinema, an artistic work — and yet it never loses sight of the all important quality of entertainment ...

There is not even one flaw evident in the casting, and it will take some extraordinarily impressive performances from other actors this year to keep no less than three actors in "The Godfather" (Brando, Caan and Pacino) from competing against each other for the same award ... that of Best Acting Performance.

There's no question that Brando has not lost his ability; even his staunchest critics must resign themselves to this (or resign) themselves to eating crow when the awards start rolling in. With plastic stuffed into his cheeks, his eyes made up, and speaking in the whispers of an old man, Marlon Brando has made his comeback with perhaps his most moving performance.

Most of the dialogue has been retained and virtually every important scene in the novel has been presented on the screen in startlingly specific detail. Let me cite a passage from the novel in backing up my statement. The scene is Michael's assassination of a rogue cop: "The shot was bad. It caught McCluskey in his thick bull-like throat and he started to choke loudly as if he had swallowed too large a bite of the veal. Then the air seemed to fill with a fine mist of sprayed blood as he coughed it out of his shattered lungs. Very coolly, very deliberately, Michael fired the next shot through the top of his white-haired skull." The scene is filmed in precisely the same manner. The same shots, the same effect.

"The Godfather" is rated R and it did not get that rating because a bare breast had been exposed to the cameras. The film deals with a violent American subculture and that violence hits the screen with an impact which rivals the films of Russell and Peckinpah.

—Space did not permit a total reprint of my earlier review today. But perhaps the best closing description to share again is a simple one. I saw the film when it was first released and, at that time, I considered it "a milestone and the best American film I've seen in high on two years." Don't miss it.

UC books Jackson Browne for Oct. 7

By WILLIAM D. KERNS
Fine Arts Editor

Never let those loony University Center officials and committee members out of your sight. 'Cuz they're sneaky rascals. Just when the complaints start coming in (and believe me, I've received a few calls from students irate over the cancellation of the Dr. Hook concert earlier this semester), they make a surprise announcement that just pleases the pants off of me.

This week's surprise came late Wednesday afternoon when Sid McQueen, Pat Okerson and a few student workers informed me that they had JACKSON BROWNE booked to appear in concert in the Lubbock Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. on Oct. 7. That's a definite, not tentative, booking. And I must admit that if I had to choose between Browne and Dr. Hook, I'd have to choose the former. Ah, all good things come to those who ... well, you know the line.

This won't be Browne's first appearance on the Tech campus. Back in October 1972, he provided Lubbockites with some really, really breathtaking music. The crowd was much too small, but those who did attend sure didn't regret shelling out for a ticket ... for that was back when Browne was flying high with his renditions of "Rock Me On The Water," "Doctor, My Eyes" and "Jamaica, Say You Will." It was unfortunate that Browne was also stoned out of his gourd that night (by his own admission, though it was obvious anyway) and did too much talking. But when the music was there, it was good. "Beautiful" is the only adjective that really fits, in fact.

But that was two years ago. Since then Browne has matured even more musically (if you don't believe this, just play his "For Everyman" album ... a classic) and, ac-ording to many critics, has matured as an entertainer as well. His shows have received rave reviews. And he still has a cluster of notable songs out: "Redneck Friend" was an AM hit and "Ready Or Not" also received a lot of airplay. Anyone who owns his two albums know that they're also chock full of lovely lyrics and guitar. "Song For Adam," "Under The Falling Sky" and "These Days" — the list is endless.

As mentioned before, Browne's "For Everyman" album has earned just heaps of praise, and I've already asked UD record critic F. David Gnerre to write up a review for it. (He'll also be reviewing Bonnie Raitt's new LP, since she'll be backing up Jackson Browne on October 7). And to say that Browne's second album is an improvement over his first is quite a statement indeed ... since he proved himself to be no slouch with his eagerly awaited and well received first solo LP.

In fact, Rolling Stone reviewed said record in March of 1972 with superlatives plus, ending with "Jackson Browne's sensibility is romantic in the best sense of the term: his songs are capable of generating a highly charged, compelling atmosphere throughout, and — just as important — of sustaining that pitch in the listener's mind long after they've ended. Don't miss it." That's the way he sang then. That's the way he sings now. Don't blow your chance to see him in concert.

Tickets for the Jackson Browne show will go on sale this morning to Tech students at the UC Ticket Booth. They will be offered to Tech students only today and Monday; Tuesday morning will see the ducats made available to the general public at both John's Jeans locations as well as the on-campus ticket booth. All seats are reserved, and tickets are sold for $4 in advance and $5 at the door.

Statistics misleading

Editor's note: Jean Steinhauer is a counseling psychologist at the University Counseling Center.

An article titled "Are Women Smarter Than Men?", printed on the front page of the UD Friday, September 13, illustrates the nearly automatic tendency to discount the achievement of women. Upon learning that overall grade point average at Tech is higher for women than men, particularly in the freshman year, reporter Tom Shea visited with a couple of professionals and a couple of graduate students and came up with several theories about why this is so.

First he stopped off at the counseling center, where a staff member commented that "The guys like to think the girls have pretty legs and like to sit up at the front of the classroom..." This image of West Texas freshmen coeds as sophisticated sirens, luring the guileless faculty into giving them good grades, was so funny that it kept me chuckling all weekend, but I didn't chuckle over the implicit message, that women don't earn their grades. Now, let me be fair to the staff member and say that he added that he, personally, didn't buy that theory. Nevertheless, this initial image set the tone of the article. This staff member went on to offer the valid empirical information that women score higher verbally and that verbal ability carries over into nearly all areas of higher education.

Then Mr. Shea reported on his conversation with an associate professor in psychology, who offered the legally interesting hypothesis that "in order to even enter Tech, women must show a special talent for academics..." (Not true, by the way. Tech has an open door admissions policy.) Enter a psychology graduate student with a theory of a differential grading system which he attributes to the easy courses women take - home ec. and things like that, while the men are in the hard sciences and are being groomed by their professors for graduate school. Now the reader knows that, with respect to women and grades:

a. They don't deserve the grades they get.

b. It's harder for women than for men to get into Tech in the first place.

c. They take easier courses.

That about takes care of it, right?

Wrong. It is well known among student personnel researchers in higher education that women have higher grade point averages than men do. This is true at universities throughout the country; in fact, it is true throughout most of public education. The fall, 1973 GPA for freshmen men was 1.95; for women, it was 2.52. GPA's go up slightly as students become upper classmen, and are consistently somewhat higher in the spring semester. The overall GPA for seniors in the spring, 1973, was 2.55 for men and 2.94 for women. These patterns are consistent throughout higher education. With respect to grade point average, the system devised for measuring achievement in college, the data are clear: women do better than men do.

By the way, I don't think women are smarter than men, or that men are smarter than women - I don't quite know what this global concept of "being smart" is, or just what grades measure. The question of who is smarter than whom is the wrong question. We will do better to address ourselves to the issue of development of individual potential. This includes helping persons overcome handicaps which makes learning more difficult, and it also includes encouraging individuals to develop and maintain capability, to extend themselves into their possibilities. Buried inside the statistics of the article is the human tragedy - the estimate that some 40 per cent of the freshmen who come to Tech, both male and female, drop out. This, together with a grade point average under 2.00 for freshmen men, adds up to a lot of failure experience, and points to an enormously important social problem in the university.

Certificates still valid

Voters need not re-register

Persons who voted in the 1972 presidential election, or were eligible to, are still qualified to vote in the upcoming general election, Nov. 5, according to Russell S. Hardin, Lubbock County tax assessor - collector.

Application for a voter registration certificate may be made through Oct. 5 for those persons who have not voted in Texas previously. The tax assessor - collector's office should be notified before Oct. 30 by voters who have moved since the last election.

When the address change is confirmed the voter will be informed of his new polling place. Hardin said no proof of age or residency is required for voter registration. If a person has lost his registration receipt, he will be able to vote anyway because the voter's name will appear on the poll list at the precinct for which he is registered.

Persons who move from one county to another must re-register 30 days prior to the upcoming election if they wish to vote in their place of new residence. A certificate form of voter registration cancellation will then be mailed to the registrar of the previous county.

If any questions should arise about voter registration, Hardin suggested the county tax assessor - collector's office be contacted.

Ag Awareness Day scheduled Monday

By SUSIE RICHBURG
UD Staff

Tech's first Ag Awareness Day has been scheduled for Monday. Highlight of the day will be an address by Tech Regent Charles G. Scruggs, editorial director of "Progressive Farmer" magazine.

Scruggs will speak in the University Center (UC) Ballroom at 7:30 p.m. Showings of the magazine's multi-screen slide presentation, "The Now South," will be in the Ballroom at 9:30 a.m.; 11:30 a.m.; and immediately following Scruggs' 7:30 address.

Displays by the Texas Department of Agriculture on Texas agricultural products will be set up in a mobile unit near the UC. A farm implement show designed to show the progress made in farm equipment through the years will also be in front of the UC.

A pancake supper jointly sponsored by the Tech

Dietetics Association and Aggie Council is scheduled from 6 - 7:30 p.m. in the faculty cafeteria in the west end of the U.C. Triticale four (from a new wheat-rye cross noted for its high protein content) will be used in making the pancakes.

Objectives of Ag Awareness Day are:

-To point out to all university students the importance of agriculture and its role in producing food and fiber.

-To encourage more non-agricultural majors to enroll in general interest courses in the College of Agriculture.

-To cooperate with agricultural interests in the community in order to point out the importance of agriculture.

Tech's Aggie Council and Lubbock Agricultural Club are co-sponsoring the event. Students, faculty and administrators in all areas of the university are invited to attend the activities being planned in connection with Ag Awareness Day, a spokesman said.

Murray endorsed for Board

Tech President Grover Murray was renominated recently to another six-year term on the National Science Board.

Dr. Murray, along with Rice University President Norman Hackerman, was endorsed by Sen. Lloyd Benson as having demonstrated a "continuing excellence" within his chosen profession, academic discipline, university and larger community.

Dr. Murray, who has served as Tech's president since 1966, was educated in geology at the University of North Carolina and Louisiana State University (LSU). He chaired LSU's geology department and served as vice president and dean of academic affairs before coming to Tech. Since 1969, Dr. Murray has also been President of the Tech School of Medicine.

Senator Bentsen continued in his endorsement of Dr. Hackerman and Dr. Murray, saying that both have proven their ability to make hard decisions and "to balance the many demands with the growing but nevertheless limited resources of their fine universities."

"Their decision-making ability and management experience," said Bentsen, "have already been utilized by the National Science Board, and both will certainly be drawn upon heavily in the years ahead."

VA counselors help veterans

Dennis McMillan and Danny Cook are the Veterans Administration's "men-on-campus."

They recently returned from an intensive two-week course conducted at West Georgia College in Carrollton, Ga., which provided the necessary training for their newly created jobs.

The VA's new program is designed to provide personalized service to veterans receiving educational assistance benefits under the GI Bill.

The Tech veterans representatives are prepared to resolve individual payment inquiries, eliminate many payment delays and are on hand to answer any other questions the veteran might have concerning the GI Bill.

McMillan said there are basically three categories under which a veteran or his dependents can benefit from the educational assistance as provided in the GI Bill.

The first classification applies to vets who have served 180 or more days in the service and wish to attend college. They are subsidized according to their status.

Disabled veterans are the second classification. Each disabled veteran under this program is assigned a personal adviser who will provide him with individual educational assistance programs, they are also available to answer any question the veteran might have.

Finally, widows, wives and dependent children of deceased or disabled (to the degree he is "unemployable") veterans are eligible for educational assistance. There is pending legislation that would provide an increase in all these educational benefits.

McMillan said although his and Cook's primary function is to help the veteran with educational assistance programs, they are also available to answer any question the veteran might have.

In addition to helping Tech veterans, they travel to South Plains College, Lubbock Christian College and Wayland Baptist College. One representative will always be at Tech to provide service.

McMillan and Cook have offices in West Hall.

Don't let the smoke screen being put out by the Athletic Department fool you. The New Mexico Lobos won't give the Red Raiders much of a tussle this weekend in Albuquerque. For one thing, I didn't hear any of the patented "best ever" quotes used in connection with New Mexico so that's a sure indication they aren't too potent.

As any long-time observer of the Tech football scene can vouch, every team the Raiders have faced in the last two years has had a "best we'll face all season" of some type. But not the Lobos and that should spell little trouble for Tech. The coaches must have looked high and low for something good to say about New Mexico but if even they can't find a "best ever" superlative there just must not be much there.

About the best superlative used in connection with the Lobos is they are an "enthusiastic" bunch. Enthusiastic brings to mind a junior high football team I once played for that went 1-9. We didn't win much because we were awfully small across the front line but we outthused our opponents every week. At least that was what our coach told us but I remember after about seven defeats in a row I wasn't too enthused about anything.

I'll be glad when Tech's schedule agreement with New Mexico runs out. Back in the days of the Border Conference the Tech-NM match-up was all right but times have changed with the coming of Carlen. It's high time Tech undressed the turkeys from the schedule and started playing some quality teams.

The Tech program has reached a status where it is competitive with any team in America, to coin a phrase I hear a lot during recruiting season. The facilities, the players, the coaching staff — all are pretty top notch. So why not bring our schedule up to the same level and give the Lubbock sports fans a chance to see some of the top teams in the country from the stands instead of from their living rooms.

Look at Arkansas. They jumped all the way into the top ten this week by virtue of a win over a team like Southern California. It's a sad but true fact of life that certain teams like USC, Oklahoma, Ohio State and Notre Dame have a name value that makes a win or even a good showing against them a feat which a team can be extremely proud.

Tech made a step in the right direction this season by replacing Western Athletic Conference (WAC) member Utah with a Big Eight team, Iowa State. Iowa State is definitely not one of the Big Eight powers but still they are a good outfit. Now if Tech could just get rid of New Mexico, the remaining WAC team. There isn't much we can do now but play New Mexico but maybe Tech officials will remember this motto when they go to make future schedules: Quit quacking with the WAC!

No stands

The dismal skeleton of Tech's benchless track stadium lies in the background as Tech forward Joel Ehle from Richardson works on his shooting. Tech takes the field against TCU tomorrow at 2 p.m. in their season opener at the track stadium. Admission is free.

Raiders tackle enthusiastic Lobos

By JEFF KLOTZMAN
Asst. Sports Editor

"Revenge" and "enthusiasm" will be standing on the Lobos' sideline Saturday night when New Mexico entertains Tech in the second outing for both clubs at 7:30 p.m. (MST) at University Stadium.

Both ball clubs registered wins last weekend with New Mexico taking a 32-23 verdict over Colorado State while Tech whipped Iowa State 24-3. The Lobos are out to avenge a 41-7 thrashing administered by the Raiders in Lubbock last season.

The Raiders are highly favored over the Lobos because of their balanced attack both offensively and defensively. Tech unleashed Larry Isaac on the ISU Cyclones and the sophomore sensation romped for 126 yards on 19 carries and two touchdowns. Fullback John Garner added 88 more steps on 14 carries and quarterback Tommy Duniven connected with tight end Pat Felix on an 11-yard TD aerial.

Duniven was nine for 12 in the passing department and gained 36 yards on eight scampers. Brian Hall was credited with the remaining Tech points as he was true on all three PATs and split the crossbars for a 24-yard three pointer.

Tech plans to show the Lobos the same offensive strategy that worked effectively against the Cyclones. They established their running game outside in the first quarter with Isaac going wide on sweeps and this eventually opened the middle for Garner's slashing gainers. Duniven will also take to the air with talented receivers Lawrence Williams and Jeff Jobe running the patterns.

Tech will go with Duniven, Garner, Isaac and Williams in the backfield with Marc Pace, Cliff Hoskins and Rufus Myers scheduled to see plenty of action as backups.

Felix and Jobe will be at ends while Floyd Keeney and Daylon Byerly line up at quick guard and strong guard. Tommy Lusk will start at strong tackle with John Fitzpatrick lining up at quick tackle. Jim Frasure will take care of the snapping chores. Defensively, Tech will have Thomas Howard and Tommy Cones at defensive ends while Ecomet Burley, David Knaus and Kim Bergman handle the inside play.

Charlie Beery and Tom Dyer will line up at linebackers with Harold Buell and Randy Lancaster in relief. Gary Bartel and Randy Olson will patrol the corners. Curtis Jordan and Tony Green roam the secondary at free and strong safety.

Hall will handle the PATs and field goals while Dave Mellott takes care of the kickoff chores and David Kuykendall handles the punting. Kuykendall averaged 39.7 yards per punt against the Cyclones on three boots.

New Mexico will counter with quarterback Steve Myers, a juco-transfer who threw two scoring passes to all-conference flanker Ken Lege against CSU. Runningbacks Chester Goodson and George Anderson are the workhorses for the Lobos and both resemble Tech ex James Mosley in the running department. They run low to the ground and are hard to tackle.

Defensively, the Lobos' big threat is in the line where four starters from last year return. Noseguard Bill Bassetto is the nucleus of the squad but tackle Mike Rupcich was the big man last week as he made 12 unassisted tackles and caused a turnover. Ends Greg Jones and Robin Cole are considered the best players in the Lobo camp.

Hog linebacker gets his man

A picture of Southern California tailback Anthony Davis has been on Winston's wall since he arrived here for fall football practice.

Winston got his man last week when the Razorbacks put the quietus on Davis and USC in a 22-7 upset.

The Arkansas linebacker was credited with 12 unassisted tackles and helped on eight others. For his performance, Winston was named The Associated Press' Defensive Player of the Week. "Underneath his picture, it said, 'Anthony Davis runs over Arkansas defense.' I had my own little quotes under the bottom ... like 'not this time,'" Winston said.

This week, he said, a picture of Oklahoma State University back George Palmer will be on his wall.

"When we finish the season, I'm going to have the outstanding running backs we play against up on my wall," he added.

Winston was asked about tackling Davis, who netted only 74 yards on 20 attempts.

"I saw him coming, and I just went to him. I think it was a great honor just to hit somebody like Anthony Davis. It just felt great when I hit him."

Arkansas defensive Coach Frank Falks has said Winston has an "evil streak" in him on the football field.

Murphy picks Tech for education

By KIRK DOOLEY
Sports Writer

About this time last year there were posters displayed throughout campus which read: "This weekend only — Hear Gay Activist Ross Murphy at the UC — 50 cents w-Tech ID." Although the posters were only a big joke, Murphy became famous overnight despite the fact that he is neither gay nor an activist. Instead he is a sophomore noseguard who plays behind all-SWC David Knaus.

Actually, Ross Murphy was one of the most sought after high school players in the Southwest over the past couple of years. Coach Carlen and his recruiting staff must have popped the champagne when Ross signed with Tech, especially since they sneaked him out of Oklahoma — where all Okies and many Texans go to play football. I'll throw in a whole case of champagne because "Murph" was the Oklahoma Player of the Year in football his senior year while playing linebacker! The Player of the Year award is supposed to be reserved for the quarterbacks and half-backs and other so-called glory boys. Needless to say, Ross must have done something outrageously good to receive such an honor.

Following over 150 scholarship offers (he can't even name that many schools), he decided to stay fairly close to home. Ross visited a dozen schools and Tennessee finished in a tie with Tech. What happened to Oklahoma? Well, it's been said by more than one person, but Ross noted that the OU people could have been more honest with him.

"Knoxville and Lubbock remind me of each other," said Ross, "I like the easy going, friendly people at both places. Sports are emphasized at both and neither school was too far from my home in Tulsa. I chose Tech because I really do like Texas and Texas people and because Coach Carlen was the only coach out of all of them who seemed to care if I graduated from school even if I never played ball."

Murphy commands respect with his sense of values. He admitted that he was proud to be picked for the prep All-America team but he emphasized that he was equally proud to win a place for himself on the scholastic All-American team. He is realistic enough to know that although he is a very gifted athlete, sports aren't the only thing in life. He hates being referred to as something like jock or animal, but instead thinks of himself as a student-athlete who is here to have fun, play ball and get a degree.

"Ross the Hoss," as his teammates call him, rarely watches TV and strangely enough, when he wants to relax or get something off his mind he starts to lift weights. "Not the muscleman type," he interjects, "but rather the power weightlifting that simply makes me stronger." He bench presses 420 pounds when he wants to but usually not when there are lots of people around. He doesn't want the show-off image.

An avid hunter, Ross gets away from people and football long enough to do some quail and dove hunting near Post. This Christmas he plans to go turkey and deer hunting in Brady.

Other activities he is involved include the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and Campus Crusade for Christ, plus he is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon and spends some time with his frat brothers also. When he has no homework he rarely stays at Weymouth. Chelsea Street Pub is his favorite "hangout" and as far as nightlife goes "all most anything will entertain me."

Ross is a levelheaded person and is well versed in many aspects — yet he, like the rest of us, has his own strange habits. One of them is his love for fruit. He is constantly eating a pear or an apple or an orange. He doesn't like bananas, however, "because they are too squishy." Yet a very reliable source explained to me that actually one day while he was eating a banana someone called him a gorilla and hurt his feelings. "Yea," said Ross, "I'll never forget that little guy — and I haven't touched a banana since."

Ross is studying the effects of fruit and vitamins on the human body. He does things like slurping up raw eggs and eating raw meat. Sometime soon he plans to go a complete month as a vegetarian. This has nothing to do with his future, fortunately. He's majoring in petroleum engineering and plans to be a billionaire in a short time.

Practical jokes were a big part of last year for him. He once put a live quail in front of a friend's room with a note attached to its box thanking the bewildered victim for adopting him. Ross also once called this guy's date and explained to her that her date had left town and that he was sorry that he had to break the date. (This reporter understands fully how the poor guy felt ... she was my date.)

Murphy expressed concern that his victim in that escapade is the one selected to write about him for The University Daily. But, for a socially responsible reporter that's ridiculous of course. Objectivity is the aim of any reporter and it should be emphasized that Ross Murphy is a very delicate person. So, within the confines of this page is the last place anyone would ever find the big ape called a gorilla.

Alex's Analysis
Debby Alexander

Glancing around during one of the frequent lulls in action in last week's game with Iowa State, my attention was caught by this guy in the backfield. He was standing apart from the other players, hands on hips, coolly surveying the situation. But what caught my eye was the variation of his uniform. Not taking anything away from the other Raiders, I have to say the boy looked sharp.

The difference resulted from a few added touches like a black towel, complete with the number 26, hung from the waist, black elbow pads, and black wrist bands. He was the only player I could see that had black stripes on his socks.

Tech's number 26 is free safety Curtis Jordan. I was beginning to wonder what he was protesting with all the black accents, but after talking with Jordan this week, he assured me the reason was due to his "just being colorful." "I have to have the towel to keep my hands dry, and I thought I might as well look good while doing it," he added.

Jordan is also a standout when there is action. Rarely caught out of position and a sure tackler, he intercepted two passes last year and was placed on "Texas Football's" defensive superteam in their 1974 issue.

Known as a speedster (he runs the 40 in 4.5), Jordan hopes to see more action in Saturday's game against New Mexico. New Mexico is more of a passing team than Iowa State so Jordan should be busy. Admitting he was rather bored at last Saturday's game, Jordan said, "I'm really looking forward to New Mexico — I think it will be a better test for me."

Being a free safety, Jordan often remains the only obstacle between the opposition and a touchdown. This situation apparently does not bother the 6-2, 184 pound junior, who nonchalantly said, "When I see a guy coming my way, I just think, 'Dude, you're not gonna make it.'" They usually don't make it, either.

Concerning goals for this season Jordan echoed what everybody in town is thinking when he said, "I wanna win the Cotton Bowl." Pushed for a comment on Texas, Jordan said, "Texas is just another team — the problem is that everybody treats them like they're not. I don't even think about Texas until the game comes up." Reminded that they will be here next week, Jordan smiled, "Yea, and I'll be here too."

I think he summed up his attitude concerning everything from life to football when he laughed and said, "You just gotta stay cool."

Taking into account that cool breeze approach, combined with his flair for a little extra class on the field, one has to admit, the man has style.

Touch football begins Sunday

By TERRY HELGREN Sports Writer

Team sports in the men's intramural program kicks off Sunday with touch football. Registered for play this year will be 36 touch teams, and 31 flag teams.

A new sport to intramurals this year, Super-stars, will be concluding competition Saturday with nine holes of golf.

Leading the field with 24 points is Gene McNeely of Muddough Hall. McNeely took second place in bowling with a 177, and placed second also in the 100 yard freestyle swimming meet with a time of 1:08.4, and dominated the field in the weight-lifting competition, lifting 225 pounds to take first place.

In second place is Bruce McClendon from ATO with 17 points. McClendon came in second in weight-lifting, jerking 185 pounds, and won first place in the swimming event with a 1:07.4 time.

Holding third place is Bill Meeks, an independent, capturing 15 points. He lifted 175 pounds for third place in the weight-lifting, and swept the field in the soft-ball throw with a throw of 235 ft.

League bowling begins today with 24 teams in participation.

The deadline for Grad-Fac touch football is Monday, as well as the entry deadline for partnership miniature golf.

This year's tug-of-war competition has 14 teams enlisted and the tugging will begin Tuesday on touch football field No. 1.

Mondt says Lobos improved

By DAVID COOK
Sports Writer

was his first major college football game.

The rest of the Lobo backfield is stocked with hard-nosed runningbacks. "We really didn't have anyone break for any long runs," said Mondt, "but we got some good second - effort running inside." Fullback Toby Parrish was the leading rusher last week with 78 yards and tailback Chester Goodson followed with 60 steps. Kevin Thompson at tailback and fullback Floyd Perry give the Lobos good depth.

The offensive line is strong and experienced with starters Ken Brown at center, guards David Cook and Edgar Bell along with tackle Ted Green. Mondt noted that the line's pass protection against CSU was extremely good while the blocking for the ground game was "not as good as it could be."

Mondt labeled his receiving corps his best unit and with performers like split end Ken Lege, who utilized his 4.5 speed to snag two TD aerials last week, it's hard to argue with him.

Quarterback Myer's top receiver in junior college, Gil Stewart, followed him to Lobo land and despite a mild concussion, suffered in the CSU contest, he is expected to play. There is quality depth here too, with Steve Bauer and Preston Dennard. Mondt will also use a two-tightend offense occasionally. Preston Hall and Pete Robison more than adequately fill the bill there.

Although the Lobo defense is loaded with seasoned performers, a new 5-2 defensive alignment has caused some problems. "We missed some tackles and had two long passes completed against us," said Mondt, "so there is definitely room for improvement."

In the defensive line, the top hands are the defensive ends.

"Robin Cole and Greg Jones both played very well," he said, "our two sophomore tackles were inconsistent at times but they'll improve as the season wears on."

Senior Bill Bassetto will start at middle guard for the Lobos, but Mondt noted that Steve Ciepiela has been more consistent lately and he would see considerable action also. While the linebacking corps is rather green, the defensive secondary boasts the most experienced unit with three starters returning from last season. "They had some problems last week because they were unfamiliar with some of the keys in our new defense," Mondt said. But cornerbacks Ronnie Wallace and Rick Jones along with free safety Randy Rich are all excellent ballhawk.

According to Mondt, the reason his team switched from their usual man for man coverage into more of a zone defense is for consistency. He said, "We want to become a more consistent defensive team and tie our linebacking and secondary coverage together tighter to eliminate mistakes."

The Lobo kicking game is described by Mondt as "pretty good". The punter is Steve Bauer, who averaged 44.2 yards last season to finish second nationally. "Against CSU we missed two extra points and a field goal, so I guess you could say that there's room for improvement in that department," said Mondt.

When questioned about the Tech offense, Mondt replied, "Tech has a confident and sound offense. With Garner and Isaac carrying the ball, everybody is going to have a hard time stopping them this year." The New Mexico mentor felt his defense must stop the ball-control offense of the Raiders in order to win. "We can't overcommit against the run because of their passing game," he said, "Duniven doesn't make mistakes."

Mondt knows about Tech's reputation against the run. "We'll undoubtedly have to throw, but that's what we're best at," he said. "Tech has as good a pass rush as there is with guys like Burley and Knaus, so the key may be how well we protect the passer."

Most of the players on this year's team were on the Lobo team that Tech demolished 41-7 and Mondt said they remember last year's encounter well. "Our players aren't scared at all," Mondt pointed out, "but they're not overconfident either. I just hope our last game with Tech serves as an incentive for our players to be ready to go this time."

Admissions rule bent

DALLAS (AP) — Athletes and others who have been rejected for academic reasons by Southern Methodist University have later been admitted for selective reasons, school officials have reported.

School officials said the athletes — primarily football players — apparently met the NCAA-required 2.0 high school grade point average but did not meet SMU's higher admission standards.

Eleven students were admitted in 1971 under the special category, the Faculty Senate Athletic Committee reported. The number grew to 17 in 1972 and 16 in 1973.

This fall, 23 students were admitted after their applications had been rejected by the committees governing usual freshman admissions.

The special admissions have not been limited to athletes, however, but have extended to minorities, artists, bandmen, or others "who may be deficient in some areas but who have a special talent," said Dr. Harold Jeskey, former chairman of the Athletic Faculty Committee.

When questioned about the Tech offense, Mondt replied, "Tech has a confident and sound offense. With Garner and Isaac carrying the ball, everybody is going to have a hard time stopping them this year." The New Mexico mentor felt his defense must stop the ball-control offense of the Raiders in order to win. "We can't overcommit

Fem netters begin play

Tech's women's tennis team will have its initial team match of the year today against South Plains Jr. College. This is an important match for the Raider fems since South Plains is in the same Zone as Tech.

Kim King, Claire Balcom, sophomore Sally Mayers; and junior, Nancy Squyres.

Judge rules against NCAA

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge here has delayed a hearing on a temporary restraining order against the National Collegiate Athletics Association (NCAA) thus allowing Southern Methodist football captain and center Mike Smith to play Saturday. SMU will play Virginia Tech at the Cotton Bowl. Smith had been declared ineligible because of violations of NCAA rules but he went to court last Friday and obtained a restraining order from U.S. District Court Judge Sarah T. Hughes. The judge set a hearing for today, but on Wednesday delayed the hearing until Sept. 26. Judge Hughes said the delay would allow Smith's attorneys to take deposition from three officials of the NCAA at Kansas City. SMU was placed on a two-year probation by the NCAA just before the start of the football season. School officials had admitted that cash awards had been given to players who executed outstanding plays. The nature of Smith's violations was not revealed.
