Gubernatorial race heads state, local elections

Texas voters today will select a governor, officeholders for lesser state offices, 16 U.S. House members, a number of legislators and many local officials.

Major elections of local interest are between the 28th Senatorial District candidates and among the District 75, Place 1 candidates. The governor's race also has a strong local flavor, with former Lubbock Mayor Jim Granberry running against incumbent Democrat Dolph Briscoe.

STATE AND LOCAL OFFICIALS have predicted a low voter turnout for the election, blaming voter disgust with politics and the lack of major campaign issues.

Statewide, the Texas Election Bureau predicts a turnout of 2.75 million out of 5.4 million registered voters. Locally, County Clerk Frank Guess predicts a turnout of 20,000 voters out of the 94,000 eligible voters in Lubbock county.

Democratic County Chairman Dan Croy said low voter turnout could pose problems for the Democrats. And Republican County Chairman Gary Riley called 1974 "the year of apathy."

The senatorial campaigns of Republican Bob Garner and Democrat Kent Hance has been fairly low-key. Garner has called Hance a liberal, and Hance has responded by saying he will vote on the issues and what is good for the area.

THE MAJOR FLARE-UP in the legislative campaign came when Republican David Sullivan said the incumbent Democrat Elmer Tarbox is not a competent and independent legislator. Tarbox replied by saying Sullivan is "a fine boy."

Notable unopposed candidates on Lubbock ballots include U.S. Rep. George Mahon, State Rep. R. B. (Mac) McAlister, Criminal District Attorney Alton Griffin and County Judge Rodrick Shaw.

Here are the statewide races other than governor:

Pom pom sale aids Carol of Lights

Residence Halls Association President Bob White (center) and Ann Marie Wald, RHA member, try to convince Raider Red to buy a red and black pom pom. Proceeds from the sales of the pom poms, which are 50 cents each, will help finance the Carol of Lights. If enough funds are not raised, chances are that there will be no Carol of Lights this year.

Lieut. Gov.: Democrat Bill Hobby is seeking another term. He is opposed by Republican Gaylord Marshall of Dallas and Socialist Workers candidate Dan Fein. No one has campaigned.

COMPTROLLER: Bob Bullock, 45, is seeking to succeed Robert S. Calvert. He wants to tighten up on retailers who fail to turn in the sales tax. He also wants the big companies audited for tax purposes. He claims his Republican opponent, Nick Rowe, 36, of Austin has no governmental experience. Rowe, former war prisoner, says he is the professional while Bullock is what he calls a "political opportunist."

Attorney General: Atty. Gen. John Hill had little opposition from Republican Tom Cole of Houston and Socialist Worker Pedro Vasquez, also of Houston.

Treasurer: This settled down to the question of whether Texas is getting enough interest on its funds deposited in banks. Democrat Jesse James says his office got $51.6 million in interest in the last 12 months. Republican Robert G. Holt, Amarillo banker, says he could get $250 million in-

LAND COMMISSIONER: Bob Armstrong, Democratic incumbent, has not campaigned because of the inactivity of his two opponents, Republican Mary Lou Grier of Boerne and William Rayson of Houston, a Socialist Worker.

Agriculture Commissioner: Democrat John White, in office 24 years, saw little need to campaign, although Zack Fisher, 32, Memphis farmer, staged a strong race.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONER full term: Jim Langdon, the incumbent, is opposed by Joe Cain, Houston Republican; Fred Garza, Houston, Raza Unida; and Rick Congress, Houston, Socialist Workers.

Railroad Commissioner for unexpired term: Democrat Mack Wallace, an appointee, is seeking his first full term, opposed by Republican Dale Steffes of Houston.

POLLING PLACES will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. today. Anyone registered to vote in 1972 in Lubbock county is automatically eligible to vote in the 1974 general elections.

SWC schools diverse in athletic ticket selling

By JOHN CAMP UD Reporter

The differences between student ticket sales and seating policies of Southwest Conference (SWC) athletic department members are as varied as their football coaching strategies.

A check with the larger statesupported institutions — University of Texas, Texas A&M, and University of Houston - revealed a dissmiliarity between Tech's athletic department student policies and those of the other schools except, in some instances,

In Austin, the University of Texas enrolls some 42,000 graduate and undergraduate students. At registration, UT students may purchase an optional "men's athletic fee" of $15 which then entitles the student admission to all athletic events except the Texas relays. UT athletic business manager Al Lundstandt explained that a dollar surcharge is required of students for the Texas relays because of the expense and prestige involved in the track

TEN DAYS BEFORE each home football game, students may begin to draw their tickets to the game in a lottery system similar to Tech's. The UT lottery continues for five days and concludes on Tuesday the week of the game. Undrawn student tickets then go on sale to the public.

According to Lundstandt, the number of students paying the optional fee this fall declined to 22,500, representing a 12 per cent since last year. He said the number of season ticket sales has also declined for the 81,000-seat Memorial Stadium.

UT Student Body President Frank Flemming described the student seating arrangements as ranging from the 50-yard line to the end zone with some student seats in the enormous upper deck. Student complaints on the UT campus, Flemming said, concerned the number of tickets a student could draw. The present system allows a student to draw up to 18 tickets with the presentation of proper number of activity cards and IDs. A student report is being worked on to propose changes in the policy, Flemming said.

TEXAS A&M STUDENT ticket sales are based on a class rank priority. A&M athletic business manager Wally Groff said fulltime seniors get first chance at the best seats on Monday the week of a home football game. Tuesday full-time juniors can choose from the remaining seats, sophomores Wednesday, and final consideration is given to fresh-

A&M Student Body President Steve Eberhard said the priority system originated when the Aggie Corps was a strong unit on campus. Although now only about 2,300 of the 21,000 A&M students are members of the corps, Eberhard said, there is little desire to change the policy.

SOME 9,000 A&M students have paid $19.80 activity fee this semester and this entitles them admission to this semester's athletic contests, Groff said. Student seating in the 48,000-capacity stadium consists of the entire upper deck and from the 50-yard line to the end zone on the east side.

As in Austin, the student complaints in College Station are about the number of tickets a single student could get. Eberhard explained, "A student can get his and his date's ticket, then up to nine other couples' tickets with the proper number of IDs. This means that for away games, a person could get 20 tickets, and if there are a limited number of tickets available, we could have a few students with a lot of tickets and a lot of students with no tickets."

Soon to be competing for the conference title, the University of Houston, with 29,000 students enrolled, uses an entirely different system. An optional ticket book is offered at registration which includes all sports for $24.

U OF H STUDENT SPEAKER of the Senate Harry Goldberg said there is a large difference between operations in Houston and the other SWC members now competing for the crown. Where most of the opponents on Houston's schedule are from distant locations, most of the SWC foes are relatively nearby. The Cougars play only four home games in the Astrodome he said, and the away games are too far to at-

Seating for the students is general admission between the 20-yard lines, directly behind the Cougar bench, Goldberg said, on a first come first serve basis. Goldberg estimated that some 6,000-7,000 students fill up the student section in the 55,000 Astrodome. Students may purchase additional student tickets to individual games for half-price or $3, he added.

The only complaint from U of H students has been about the stadium which Goldberg said leaks water. He said, the U of H students want to build a stadium on campus. "Most students would just as soon watch a game on TV at home," Goldberg said, "than watch a game in the Astrodome."

Group studying pass-fail effectiveness

By MARCIA SMITH UD Reporter

The pass-fail option has been in use at Tech since 1970. After nearly five years of operation, the effectiveness of that system is now being studied by a student-faculty committee headed by Dr. James Culp, assistant dean of Arts and Sciences.

"The grading option, with the regulations that govern it, was established to encourage students to get into fields outside their majors; to allow them to broaden their scope by getting into areas they might otherwise pass up for fear of grade pressures," explained Dr. William Johnson, interim vice president for academic affairs.

THE STUDENT-FACULTY COM-MITTEE was established to see if this goal has been accomplished, said Johnson. The committee will determine how the grading system has been used by students, the reaction of the students and faculty to the system, and if the pass-fail option needs revision.

As it stands now, students may take a maximum of 24 hours pass-fail. Nine of those hours may be used in courses that satisfy general degree requirements. No more than five hours can be taken in any one semester or six in a summer session. Courses in the major and minor fields cannot be taken pass-fail. Credit earned under the pass-fail system counts toward the total number of hours required for graduation but is students in these colleges take a not used in computing grade-point

Students take courses pass-fail for a variety of reasons, said D. N. Peterson, registrar. Some take it because they are not confident of getting a good grade in a particular course. Some take upper level courses pass-fail so they don't have to worry about lowering their GPA (grade point average). "Pass-fail allows the student to pace himself in a class. He can take a class purely for enjoyment," Peterson said.

THE NUMBER OF STUDENTS taking courses pass-fail was off about two or three per cent this semester, said Peterson. Nevertheless, pass-fail is still very popular, especially in the area of general degree requirements outside the student's major subject. For example, 10,036 courses in the college of Arts and Sciences were taken pass-fail last spring. In leafing through a roster of the courses, it becomes apparent that foreign languages and science are the most popular classes to take pass-fail in A&S. In the college of Engineering, history and government courses are by far the ones most students take pass-fail.

Agriculture majors take chemistry and English pass-fail more than any other courses. Science is the most popular pass-fail course in the School of Education. Business and Home Economics are the exceptions: more required major subject pass-fail than another subject outside the major. Of the 30,479 courses which were taken pass-fail last spring, almost all were

WHY NOT DO AWAY WITH grades altogether and use only the pass-fail system? Peterson said, "If I had a transcript with just Ps on it, I'd feel cheated." He explained that the A student isn't distinguished from the C student in a pass-fail system. And, he added, there is a connotation to seeing a P on a grade report. "Most people see a C, although it could be an A or a D."

Johnson said if the University implemented a pass-fail system to the exclusion of grades, there would be a genuine problem for the student. "The educational system is not geared to an all pass-fail system. Students need grades to get into graduate school, professional schools and honor societies. I think the system we have is appropriate."

In discussing the pass-fail system, the subject of the fairness of the present grading system necessarily comes up. Johnson said faculty members have to be the judge of the grade the student earns. The grading system rests on the ability of the faculty to grade fairly. "The faculty, here, I believe, meets the responsibility of fair grading," he said.

SOME STUDENTS ACCUSE their professors of being prejudiced towards them if they take his class pass-fail. Johnson said he didn't think professors are prejudiced. However, Peterson said he thinks some professors are prejudiced, although it's a hard fact to

He explained that the professor who is prejudiced probably doesn't understand the University philosophy towards pass-fail. Peterson's interpretation of the philosophy is to encourage a student to take a course in other fields (outside of the major) without worrying about the grade. However, Peterson did differentiate between the student who cuts class a lot and passes the course with a D minus, and the student who is truly interested in the course and attends class regularly.

"THE PROFESSOR AT FIRST isn't sure why the student is in his class, and when the student is absent, indications are that interest isn't there. That's where the prejudice comes in."

"After all, the professor's subject is his life, so of course he feels different toward a student who is not interested in learning."

Students report favorable treatment at local centers for VD infection

By CHARLEY BANKHEAD UD News Editor

Tech students can receive confidential venereal disease

(VD) treatment at two Lubbock locations. The Tech Health Center and the Lubbock City-County Health Department both provide treatment involving minimal interviews and paper work.

Vic Whadford, director of the health department's VD clinic, emphasized in a previous article that the health department is interested only in controlling VD, not passing judgment on persons who have venereal disease.

During an interview with Whadford, he received a call from a person wanting to know the results of VD tests. Whadford asked the person's Social Security number, then found the results filed under that number. "We're interested in treating people and getting all their contacts in," said Whadford. "We try to make it as confidential as possible. We try to keep paper work to a minimum and only people who work in the VD clinic have access to our files."

One male visitor to the VD clinic confirmed Whadford's statements about confidential treatment.

"There wasn't much paper work at all," he said. "They took my name, address and Social Security number. They took my Social Security number so I didn't have to give my name when I called."

This particular clinic visitor said he had a blood sample taken. When the results proved positive, he returned for a penicillin shot.

"They really try not to make you feel bad," he said. "They don't try to persecute you or anything. They try not to talk about it as much as they can. The only thing they asked many questions about was all the people you've had contact with so they can come in for treatment."

A female visitor to the Tech Health Center reported similar results in her experience with VD treatment. This particular female went to the health center about "female problems" and underwent VD testing as a routine matter.

The student said she did not have to tell anyone at the Health Center why she wanted to see a doctor until she saw a nurse. She said she was tested and received the results while still in the waiting room.

Overall, this student was satisfied with the treatment she received. However, she indicated slight annoyance with the nurses' insisting she undergo VD treatment when the student was positive she did not have venereal disease.

The endorsements

are. .

THE POLITICAL ENDORSEMENTS of The University Daily in the past have never, I believe, thrown a race one way or another. They have been made sometimes with strategical intent, sometimes with I-could-give-a-hang attitudes and sometimes for the meaningful purpose of informing voters which candidates will do them a good job.

This year The University Daily, as a newspaper, will not make endorsements. Instead, I, as editor will make them on my own, and save the hassle of insinuating that the Daily's entire staff believes as I do ... because they don't.

Just like any of my editorials, you can take or leave my comments about the candidates. I have studied the campaigns and the people themselves. Now, all I will do is try to persuade you which way to vote. With the caliber of races we have this year, persuasion may not even be necessary.

In the governor's race we have three men vying for a position which is in effect virtually powerless in this state. Dolph Briscoe, a Democrat, is clearly the favorite, though I dislike his style as an accessible, responsive official.

BRISCOE HAS BEEN blitzing the public with his canned advertisements which say nothing more than that he "kept the promise." No new taxes were imposed on the citizens of Texas during his past term. But, if all I spent my time on was keeping the taxes down for two years, I could do that too.

Somehow I want more than just a stabilization of taxes. I want to see our public schools upgraded. I want to see our penal institutions also upgraded. I want more job opportunities for Texans. I want a governor who is responsive to the students of the colleges and universities of our state.

Briscoe more than likely will win, but I hope like hell he does a bit more than he did his first time around.

Lubbock's GOP gubernatorial candidate, Jim Granberry, could've been a strong opponent for Briscoe. But, he had name identification hassles aside from the fact that as a Republican he will experience what so many Republicans usually do in Texas ... that being the Democratic Party wall

GRANBERRY IS A RATHER FINE candidate. He has made his point clear that he will be accessible to the public and the press ... something that Briscoe hasn't and probably will never attest to, He's intelligent and certainly would be an asset to this area. But, he strikes me as too conservative and many of his so-called campaign promises seem too empty for me to handle.

Ramsey Muniz. Muniz is the most pragmatic of the three. He campaigns as a candidate of the people, and not of the special interest groups that both Briscoe and Granberry serve.

Muniz's chances are almost nil, but I see my vote meaning more if I vote for him than if I vote for the other two. He is progressive and open minded. He's not one who's afraid to answer to his constituents and his liberal views toward society impress me.

He's concerned about the public school systems enough to base much of his platform on the subject. I realize his chances are not good, but I'm not ready to throw my support to the lazy Democrats of this state.

ON THE LOCAL LEVEL, in our state senatorial race, there is only one choice. Kent Hance is the first man to come to the Tech campus and actually ask the students what they want and what he could do for us. He stands head and shoulders over his Republican opponent Bob Garner.

Garner is a nothing candidate who made only a few whims and whimpers during his race. He doesn't have anything to offer except his narrow views.

Hance relates. He's a Tech grad. He was a professor here last year and even earned himself an award from the students for his excellence in the classroom. Even now he is up on the college scene as he is a regent at West Texas State

And too, Hance is young enough (31 years old) to make even more impressive bounds up the political scales. I'll gladly cast my lot with Hance.

THE TIGHTEST RACE of the day will most likely take place in the state representative faceoff in District 75, Place 1. The incumbent Democrat, Elmer Tarbox, faces strong opposition, particularly from Republican David Sullivan. La Raza Unida Party candidate Carlos Quirino also offers a relative threat.

Tarbox is not suited to go back to Austin. He's past his political prime and he is not aggressive enough to argue any points for the people of the district. His health problem is also another factor which makes me wary. The man is 58.

Sullivan made it interesting as he has attacked Tarbox on many key issues, but in the process has not provided many solutions to those key issues. He's only been in this area for three years, and I never have got the feeling that he could get anyone's confidence, if he were elected.

But, again I will as in the governor's race cast my vote for Quirino, and for the same reasons. Quirino, 23, just recently graduated from Tech and he would be by far more sensitive to the student's needs here than the other two.

If you vote, vote with caution. These candidates will be My choice will be La Raza Unida Party candidate, your officials for two and four years. And too, if you don't know anything about the candidates, please don't vote. Ignorant voting results in the same type of government we had under Richard Nixon.

Have a good day.

Washington merry-go-round

Bomb downed TWA jet

WASHINGTON — A TWA jetliner with 88 people aboard plunged into the Ionian Sea west of Athens in September. Arab terrorists claimed they brought the plane down, but the FBI found no evidence of a bomb blast.

We have now obtained secret documents which indicate a terrorist bomb was the likely cause of the crash. The FBI has also discovered that a malfunctioning bomb was planted on the same flight two weeks earlier.

The Federal Aviation Administration is so alarmed over airline bombings, meanwhile, that it has sent classified instructions to its air security chiefs calling for tighter security. And Rep. John Murphy, D-N.Y., a crusader for air safety, is making a new push for enforcement of an antihijacking law. The law permits the government to shut down flights to and from countries that give haven to terrorists.

A classified FAA report states that British sabotage experts have raised the "strong possibility" that the TWA crash "resulted from an explosion."

The FBI's air laboratory missed the evidence, according to the FAA document, because it studied only "a small portion of the wreckage." The British, in contrast, used "a scanning electron microscope to determine molecular distortion and thermal effects on recovered debris."

As a result, the FBI has been brought back into the case. Already agents have learned that the same Flight 841 from Tel Aviv to Rome was the object of a bombing plot two weeks earlier on August 26.

"A fire on the 841 flight at the Rome airport on Aug. 26 was caused by a malfunctioning explosive device," declares the secret FAA report. "An FBI laboratory examination has located small particles of C4 high explosive in a badly burned suitcase taken from the aircraft's baggage compartment."

Another classified FAA memo, dated October 18, reports ominously: "Between July and August of this year, threats against aircraft increased from 112 to 161. The increase against airports was even more dramatic: from 23 during July to 127 during August."

Rep. Murphy, in a private letter to House Commerce Chairman Harley Staggers, D-W.Va., calling for hearings, reports that airports throughout Europe and the Mideast are on "red alert." This means their security staffs have been doubled or tripled.

Footnote: The FBI was sufficiently upset over the new evidence that a bomb may have caused the TWA crash that it is going deeply into an explosion in September at Boston's Logan International Airport. A Mideast-bound suitcase blew up in a baggage room. But the Logan crash debris so far hasn't yielded any evidence similar to the Rome bomb

In the case of a Hong Kong school, for example, we had reported that the General Accounting Office found 118 children supposedly were being assisted by the fund. But the GAO could not find one of the 118 enrolled at the school.

"In other words," inquired Mondald of Mills, "the money was coming to the school ... from American donors ... and even (though) the children were gone, that money was still coming. For how long?"

"It was nearly six months, sir," replied the abashed Mills. The charity head went on to confess that the fund did not even know of the diversion of funds until the GAO turned it up.

Turning to Kenya, Mondale asked Mills about our report that only 25 per cent of the gifts from donors ever reached the "Correct," Mills ruefully admitted again. "The superintendent took it upon herself to distribute (the money) among the rest of the children on the project."

Time after time, Mills conceded the accuracy of the facts in our story, until Mondale finally suggested that "some of your management and control techniques have fallen somewhat behind."

Once again, the chastened Mills replied, "That is correct."

Mills has promised to clean up his operation.

Senatorial candidates voice similar views on top issues

The cleanest split between the 28th Senatorial District candidates occurs on constitutional revision. Democrat Kent Hance wants a "broad-based citizens group" to write a new constitution. Republican Bob Garner says constitutional revision "is not one of my pressing concerns."

Garner has said he is basically at one with the electorate, that he knows the problems and attitudes of the people, and that he is very conservative, while his opponent is a liberal.

But, Hance and Garner take similar stands on school financing, right-to-work and the expected budget surplus. Hance said that issues, not political philosophies, are most important, and he will "look at every issue and then vote for what's best for the area."

Garner said he is not "up-tight" about the old constitution, but he feels a majority of Texans want a new state charter.

Both candidates, however, take the similar stand that private citizens, not politicians, should rewrite the con-

HANCE SAID PRIVATE citizens should write a new constitution and present it to the voters for approval. Special interests become involved with this summer's Constitutional Convention, Hance said, and he predicted it will happen again if legislators attempt to rewrite the old constitution.

Garner and Hance

Right-to-work and a prohibition against state income taxes belong in the constitution, Garner said. "If we don't, we're going to have a state income tax."

Hance also said right-to-work belongs in the constitution, but that the item should be submitted separately to the Concerning state financing of education, Hance said schools with balanced or surplus budgets should not be punished. For schools not adequately funded, Hance proposes first to require those schools to prove the lack of a taxable base before state funds are provided. Second, if the school district cannot provide adequate funds, the state should provide enough funding to assure a standard of quality education.

GARNER'S PROPOSAL for equitable funding of public education is similar to Hance's. Garner would require each local district to tax a maximum allowed by law. State funds would then be given to those districts needing supplemental funds. Garner said his proposal would allow local control of the school system.

Garner questions the expected budget surplus of $1.5 billion. "I don't think it's a real surplus," but rather a fund created by inflation and the sales tax, he said. Excess savings have accumulated to the detriment of state employes, Garner believes. He is in favor of giving a raise to Hance said the surplus is present because the state comptroller's office projected smaller expenditure than the revenues available. Hance cautioned that the mistake could go the other way.

Hance said even though it is popular to call for raising salaries and lowering taxes, he is against lowering taxes. "I had rather take that money right now and give public employes and teachers a pay raise because they have been hurt by inflation."

SOME OF THE SURPLUS will also have to go to financing public education, Hance said, while any leftover funds should be used to purchase revenue - producing bonds. Garner proposes taxing oil and gas produced in Texas but exported to other states. The revenues created would finance bringing water from the Mississippi River to Texas through a system of canals and pumping stations.

Garner is unhappy about Tech's role in the election.

"It seems odd that on numerous occasions, my opponent has been invited to Tech and city functions, while all the invitations I have accepted have been cancelled," said

Garner has not spoken before the faculty and the administration and he said, "People might be making a mistake in not hearing both sides."

Hance, a Tech graduate, said he supports Tech financially and emotionally. "I have concern and a care for higher education in Texas," Hance said.

But if Tech isn't split between the two candidates, at least one local institution is. Both Hance and Garner are members of First Baptist Church.

ELECTION '74

Stories by Bob Hannan, UD reporter

Demos, GOP both make claims of victory in governor's race

In the 1972 general elections, Republican Hank Grover carried Lubbock County, polling 28,033 votes to Democrat Dolph Briscoe's 24,925.

But Briscoe took the state, and the 1974 gubernatorial election pits the incumbent Briscoe against former Lubbock Mayor Jim Granberry.

Nevertheless, County Democratic Chairman Dan Croy predicts Briscoe will take the county this year with three to seven per cent of the vote.

Gary Riley, Republican county chairman, said Croy's statement is "ludicrous" and predicted Granberry will easily carry this county.

The voter turnout this year will be lower than in the last election, Riley said, as this year is a "year of apathy."

LIGHT VOTER TURNOUT would be the biggest enemy for the Democrats, Croy said. Little interest has been shown in any of the campaigns, Croy noted, and he is not sure what has caused voter apathy. He suggests that voters are disillusioned with politics and that little interest has been generated because Republicans have found no issues.

Briscoe and Granberry both support right-to-work and equal educational opportunities.

Granberry on campus Oct. 18, said everyone ought to have the freedom to choose whether to join a union. He is also against agency shops. Briscoe said he will present to the legislature a plan for restructuring the funding system to provide every student equal access to a quality education and to equalize the burden on the taxpayer. Granberry, however, has criticized Briscoe for not calling a special session of the legislature to provide funding. "As a result, school districts all over Texas had to raise school taxes," Granberry said. NO NEW TAXES ARE required to provide additional funding, he said, because of the estimated budget surplus of

$1.5 billion. Granberry proposed 20 per cent reduction in the state sales tax, which he says is justified because of the budget Briscoe proposes instead to eliminate the utilities sales tax. The cost of utilities is rising rapidly enough, he said, and utilities should be considered in the same category as food and drugs, which are not taxed.

Some of Briscoe's priorities, as listed in his response to a League of Women Voters' questionnaire, are allowing no new or additional state taxes, improving job opportunities, having more effective child and youth care services and continuing to operate the state government within the Briscoe said the surplus in the state budget demonstrated state governments can fight inflation.

He said he will recommend to the legislature an increase in benefits for state employes and teachers. During his Lubbock visit, Briscoe also said he would continue efforts to secure an increased water supply for

GRANBERRY, RESPONDING to the same questionnaire, said the issues prompting him to run included:

-Lack of leadership from the governor (at the Constitutional Convention and in the financing of public education)

-Need to provide assistance to "badly depressed" school districts

-His support of right-to-work.

The response of Ramsey Muniz, La Raza Unida candidate, was that the foremost problem is financing public schools. He also said corporate profits should be taxed, a consumer-oriented utility regulatory agency should be established and political activities should be strictly Croy, at an Oct. 23 press conference, said the Democrats need to get across the message that Briscoe is good for the Lubbock area. He said the governor supports Tech's expanded Textile Center and the Pharmacy School.

Croy suggested, however, that the facilities might lose Briscoe's support. Croy doesn't feel Briscoe "is consciously affected by how an area votes, but it would be only human to react if Lubbock went against him twice."

Riley said it would be "ludicrous" and "a lack of professionalism" for Briscoe to react against Lubbock.

As to the benefits for the area if Granberry were elected, Riley said Lubbock County people realize the benefit of electing someone from the area. Granberry would be fair to the rest of the state, Riley said, but he could do a lot for this area and would naturally feel allegiance to his home area,

Sullivan

State representative candidates take low-key approach

The race for the District 75, Place 1 campaign for state representative involves the incumbent Democrat Elmer Tarbox, now seeking his fifth term in office, Republican David Sullivan, who is conducting an extensive face-to-face campaign, and a Tech student, Carlos Quirino, of La Raza

The campaign has been fairly low-key. Few issues have been raised. The only exchange of charges between Sullivan and Tarbox involved personal reputations, rather than

Sullivan's platform deals first with inflation, which he says state government can fight by combining state agencies and boards dealing with similar problems. The five other planks in Sullivan's platform are:

-Expanding the official Journal of the Texas House of Representatives to include verbatim floor debates -Creating regional deposit centers for copies of bills in-

-Changing election laws to move primary election dates closer to general election times and unifying primaries of all

-Rewriting the state constitution with a citizens panel

troduced in the House

-Implementing single-member legislative districts. TARBOX SAID HE IS pledged first to Texas Tech, second to Lubbock, third to West Texas and fourth to Texas. His legislative priorities, in order, are a 20 per cent increase in teacher's pay, a 20 per cent increase in teacher's retirement pay, a 20 per cent increase in state employes' pay and a 20 per cent increase in state employes' retirement pay.

As a legislator, Tarbox said he played a minor role in establishing Tech's Law and Medical Schools and will work for funding of the Pharmacy School. Tarbox also said he will work to further solidify Tech's Tarbox Parkinson Disease Institute, which he acknowledges is "not a popular issue."

Quirino wants more equitable financing of school districts, a citizen's panel revision of the state constitution, removal of right-to-work from the constitution, redistricting of the legislature, a corporate profits tax, abolishment of the state sales tax and student-faculty representation on university Board's of Regents.

TARBOX SAID THAT by Jan. 15 "everything constructive" formulated at the Constitutional Convention will be presented to the legislature in the form of amendments. Tarbox said he will support the step-by-step constitutional Both Quirino and Sullivan want the constitution revised by a citizens' panel.

Only a citizens' panel can revise the constitution, Quirino said, because allowing the constitution to be revised by the legislators subjects it to the influences of special interests

Sullivan said the people want a new constitution from a citizens panel, not from the legislature.

Quirino is opposed to right-to-work and would allow agency shops to exist. "Right-to-work impedes the efforts of laborers and workers to bargain collectively," he said. And, if a union is able to negotiate a contract favorable to the workers, all workers, union members or not, should pay something for the benefits they receive, he added.

Tarbox and Sullivan take the opposite stance.

Tarbox calls the present right-to-work provision in the constitution the best in the United States. Agency shops are a "vicious character," Tarbox said, "ten times worse than having a regular union."

SULIVAN SAID HE IS in favor of right-to-work, although he would prefer not to have right-to-work in the constitution. However, Sullivan said he would have voted for the proposed constitution which contained a right-to-work provision.

Sullivan pointed out Tarbox did not vote for the proposed constitution with the right-to-work provision. At his Oct. 23 press conference, Sullivan passed out copies of a newspaper article which said Rep. Bill Heatly of Paducah forced Tarbox to vote against the constitution.

Tarbox said he voted against the proposed constitution because it would have allowed agency shops.

Sullivan, in his attack on Tarbox at the press conference, referred to Tarbox's reputation as a Tech football star in the 1930s. "Elmer Tarbox is an honest man, but he is not competent and not independent enough to represent this district. Contrary to popular notions, politics is not a football game, Statesmanship is not a football game, responsible state government is not a football game." Tarbox's response to Sullivan's attack appeared in the Avalanche-Journal on Oct. 24. "I think Mr. Sullivan is a fine young man. I know he is from Illinois and went to law school at Harvard. I don't think he ever participated in the armed services defending the country."

SULLIVAN REPLIED WITH, "being a good football player does not make you a good state representative ... I love football. My back was injured during a football game in high school. Subsequently when I tried to enlist in the Navy and was called for the draft my back kept me out of the

A surplus of $1.5 billion is expected when the legislature convenes in January.

Sullivan said he first of all wants to make sure a surplus actually exists and that inflation does not eat away the surplus. Any surplus funds available should go first to raising the salaries of teachers and state employes, he said. He also said he thinks inflation has contributed to the surplus and he feels it would be wrong to cut taxes for 1975 and wind up with a deficit for 1976.

Tarbox sees the surplus as evidence that taxes can be reduced. About $1 billion in sales tax can be done away with, Tarbox said, and the state government can still maintain its present programs.

Quirino favors elimination of the state sale tax. The sales tax is "regressive," he said, because all taxpayers pay the same tax, whether they earn $5,000 or $20,000 a year.

Sulivan and Quirino are in agreement that singlemember legislative districts are needed here to allow the people greater contact with their legislator.

Financing of education is now a function of wealth, Quirino said. All districts should be financed in such a manner as to insure all students receive equal educational opportunities.

Sullivan wants the financing system adjusted so that taxpayers are taxed on a fair and equitable basis across the state and so that the funds are distributed equitably to all

Changing customs, history of dating discussed

By BARBARA POWELL UD Staff

Dating is many things, depending on the individual. One girl said it was getting with somebody you like and having a good time. Someone else said it was going out with a bunch of people to find out who you don't want to marry.

Frances Collins, instructor of sociology, said dating is an American addition to the process of mate selection.

In the latter part of the 19th century, couples did not have the sanction of society to be alone for four or five hours, said Collins. Usually if a couple wanted to be alone, they had to be courting and the male took the initiative. Otherwise, couples were together in group activities.

Several developments have led to a change in the dating system, Collins said. Probably the most important one was due to Henry Ford. He put America on wheels and made the front porch swing out of date, she said.

Other developments include a decrease in the control parents have, an increase in leisure time, thus the advent of commercial entertainment and the importance of privacy, individualism and happiness.

The rise of the status of the working man and the amount of money spendable has had an effect on dating as has the feminist movement.

Collins said though most men still prefer to take the initiative, some males are delighted when a girl asks them out. The guys feel the females are taking on part of the burden of dating and finances.

Dating is expensive, said Collins, and more couples are looking for less expensive ways to be together such as taking a pizza to the apartment and watching TV. Also, more couples are willing to go dutch (the girl pays her way, the guy

The feminist movement has affected dating in another way in that women reject being a sex object, Collins said. Women resent being expected to "pay-off" at the end of a

Collins has found from her class discussions if a couple does go to bed, it is usually knowing each other has a committment of affection. Most couples want meaningful relationships, though the relationship may be temporary, she said.

Many factors determine who one dates. Everyone has in the back of his (or her) mind qualities and attributions that he (or she) would like to have in a spouse, said Dr. Carl Andersen, Chairman of Home and Family Life Dept. This person, however, may not be the same one as the most fun person to date or be around now, he said.

Andersen said some dating is an act of rebellion against parents but marital satisfaction does depend on parents acceptance.

Collins agrees. Kids do wonder what their parents and hometown will think, she said. When the relationship gets serious, values begin to come into the evaluation and values are influenced by parents, she said.

Couples who marry now will pass on the same value structure they learned - "what you are supposed to tell your children regardless of what you believe (what society expects)," said Andersen. He said the structure is a repetitive

Whether peer pressure is a factor is a toss-up. Jan Greenwaldt, instructor in Courtship and Marriage, says it is, but students in her class say peer pressure is not a factor.

Dr. Jean Steinhauer, counseling psychologist at the University Counseling Center, agrees with Greenwaldt. Peer pressure makes students keep an image - dates with the right people at the right time, she said.

Collins said interest is another factor in dating. "You have to be exposed to someone before you can be emotionally involved," she said. Interest groups - fraternities, sororities, churches - serve this purpose, she said.

Even blind dates serve as a factor, Collins said. Blind dates are not done as haphazardly as we think, she said. A friend (unless the friend has it out for you) evaluates to see if you will get along with each other and then arranges the date, she said.

Dating always seems to need some helping along. Andersen recommends against communicating with one's parents because parents cannot be objective. However, parents can be objective and give advice to their children's friends, he said.

Close friends can accurately predict who the relationship will be, Andersen said.

University Counseling Center also helps people with their dating problems. Steinhauer said the center points things out about the relationship and makes suggestions.

Some people do not know how to get a relationship started. Steinhauer advised expressing some interest in him

(or her) as a person and "act on the feelings you have."

Not knowing how to handle feelings in a relationship so the relationship will grow and develop, can be a problem, too. Steinhauer said to be self-disclosing, draw the other person out, and use anger in a constructive way.

Collins said it is best to know the person at least a year and date frequently so you can see each other in all kinds of situations. "Love at first sight just doesn't hold true," she break-up, Steinhauer said. It is a time of personal change, she said. "In a personal crisis, it can result in greater personal growth or functioning less well than before," she said.

Dating is more than just being with someone. It is getting couples to ask each other questions and seek answers, Greenwaldt said. In her class she uses "An Evaluation of Dating" by Dr. Ken Cannon. He writes, "Dating is seeing each other as real persons . . . to sense another's real needs. It is creative listening - through intent listening and asking questions, you encourage the other to discuss those things which are of real importance."

Cannon continued "Emotional honesty could be increased when one feels accepted, and when he can be his real self. Thus dating might be less of a game and much more of an enriching and educational experience in close human relationships."

Dating is definitely many things, but Cannon sums it up best in his article as "Dating allows the opportunity for relatively wide-spread association with members of the opposite sex."

Hair styling gains in popularity

By RONNIE BOBBITT UD Staff

The popular high fashion look in hair styles for both men and women may be rapidly spreading throughout the country, but as far as hair fashion in the Lubbock area goes, most girls and guys are hesistant to "take the plunge" into the high fashion look.

The local theme is "anything goes." The girls' styles, the page is still popular, but is now more varied. Short layered looks are also popular along with the gypsy cut. "Everything is youth - oriented," says Diane Hudgens, owner - operator of a local hair styling shop. "Girls want a style that fits their own specific personality."

Ella Mae Benton, business manager of a Lubbock salon, commented on the new trend toward shorter hair. "We have so many college girls going by the shorter styles. It's really surprising." She said shorter styles are easier to take care of. "In today's fast - paced lifestyle, most girls and guys don't have time to spend hours on their hair. It generally goes into what is easiest for the person to take care of."

Although the preferable cut is from very short to shoulder length, long hair is not completely out of the picture. "Long looks are still in, but they're softer," said Hudgens. "Girls are tired of the long straight look." Jessie Lee, owner of a Beauty Institute here, said a large number of girls go for the traditional "glamour look." "This look," said Lee, "is the long, wavy look. These girls feel the more hair they have, the more glamorous it looks. They request body waving and curling more frequently now."

Men in this area are also notably more conscious about their hair styles. "Guys used to grow their hair long just to show people they could," said Benton. "Now they still want long hair, but they want it to look good. Our men customers are more particular than our women customers!"

The most popular haircut for men in this area is a short cut just above the collar. The Roman Cut, which is a "scattering of ends" all over the hair, is equally popular. "The styled cut that was so popular for the past few years," said Lee, "is now becoming the regular haircut for college guys in this area who do not want to go into the more expensive cuts." The layered look is also said to be popular.

As for coloring of hair, complete re-coloring has basically disappeared. The style now is either the "flash front," the lightening of the front of the hair, or the 'highlighting'' method, lightening the hair color in various places throughout the entire head of hair. Both are basic forms of streaking, but the highlighting process is used with milder chemicals.

Current clothing style also has a large emphasis on hair style preference in this area. "Clothing style definitely go hand in hand in this area," said Hudgens. "Girls and guys both want something that looks good with what they're

People also seem to be more interested in taking care of their hair. "People around here want to know more about their hair," Hudgens said. "They are looking out for gimmick products that could possibly damage their hair." Hudgens added that most girls and guys don't know what to look for in good hair products. "The best shampoos and hair conditioners contain a Ph factor of 4.5 to 5.5. The kids don't know this and sometimes end up using damaging hair products."

New styles in hair design come and go. But according to most beauty operators in the area, the "personality" style is probably here to stay for a long time.

said it best, unknowingly: "He won the fight, but I can not say he beat me."

In the squared 19-foot ring, the phenomenal Muhammad Ali was deadly. He made a shambles of the powerful fists that had wrecked in minutes such warriors as Joe Frasier and Ken Norton and had won Foreman the accolade as the ring's new "dark destroyer."

But in the recesses of the big fight's aftermath — in the cool reflection of the dressing rooms where men's souls and not their fists are tried, Ali was the vanquished.

Foreman carried the day in the department of true sportsmanship, graciousness and humility.

Ali's finest hour turned out to be Ali's greatest tragedy. The handsome, charismatic black who three times emerged from the ring's graveyard to recapture the sport's most cherished prize proved to be an arrogant, thoughtless, inconsiderate champion, a man of no compassion.

What a shame.

How all of us would have loved to have rallied behind this gifted, imposing figure and joined in shouting his praises as the Africans did Wednesday: "Ali, Ali, Ali,'

But Ali wouldn't have it. His bitterness, his vengeful heart, his bent to strike back at those who had hurt him, warped his sense of decency toward a callow youth who from all accounts - had never done him a wrong.

"I told you this man couldn't fight," Ali shouted afterward. "I told you he was slow-footed, awkward and dumb. He was humiliated. He got no right to fight me again."

Even here in darkest Africa, the first tenet of sport is: Don't kick a man when he is down. Ali not only kicked. He figuratively stepped in Foreman's face. And then pivoted. Why? Why, really?

Over in the loser's dressing room, the dethroned champion — bruised, beaten, demoralized — was telling a cordon of newsmen, "Ali is a true champion. He deserves respect. He has been a credit to his family, his race and boxing." Then, of himself, Foreman added: "In this fight, I have found a true faith, a security in myself." This fight brought to the surface in Ali's personality an ugly streak which earlier had manifested itself in bouts with Ernie Terrell, whose nose he rubbed into the ring ropes, and with a sore-back Floyd Patterson, whom he carried 12 rounds just to torture and humiliate him.

It is difficult to overlook Ali's deplorable conduct in the ring prior to Wednesday's fight. As the band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and then the Zaire national hymn, Ali leered at the champion — standing there stiff-backed in his red, white and blue robe — and spat profanities.

Any lip reader could see that the epithets were four-letter words found on the walls of bus station lavatories. It was a deplorable scene.

Ali may be justified in hitting back at authorities who took his crown without cause. No one disputes his right to fight for his race. But why degrade an opponent who was innocent of any of these offenses? Why knock an American who is sorry for its past transgressions and has made Ali a folk hero and a millionaire.

The question all of us are asking today is this: What happened to the laughing poem-spouting, prankish kid we knew as Cassius Clay? When did the cold, taunting, insensitive Muhammad Ali arrive?

have young quarterbacks and it was probably my fault for playing Tommy Duniven before he was ready. Tommy was obviously still bothered by his back but he said he was ready.'

Duniven's injury has been the key which has hurt the consistency of the Tech offense. Duniven was coming along steadily until Arizona and his absence has hurt. Don Roberts has performed well in spots filling the breach but he is even younger than Duniven in experience and freshman Rodney Allison is still learning the system. Young quarterbacks, young linemen — a young team explains the reason the Raiders have been up and down this season. A young team is the reason Tech plays well at home and badly on the road. Youth is what's wrong with the Red Raiders. Not the quarterback or the offensive line or bad defense. Just youth and the mistakes of youth.

The tonic for youth is time and hard as it is to swallow Raider fans may have to wait. Carlen said before the season this would be a rebuilding year and he was probably right. The big win over Texas overshadowed some basic deficiencies which are beginning to surface. Still, win the last three games and Tech could finish as high as 8-2-1 and that isn't bad for a rebuilding year.

Next year is realistically more the Raiders' year. The youth will be checking in with some experience and as Carlen points out only nine seniors will suit up for the Homecoming encounter with TCU Saturday. The only thing that could hurt the Raiders would be a severe case of "Landryitis."

Landryitis is in honor of Dallas Cowboy Coach Tom Landry who has had headaches over the years with having two talented quarterbacks and having his town choose up sides. Landryitis is the fear of having too many quarterbacks. Carlen could find himself in the middle of the same thing. Having the fans of Lubbock choose up sides could only hurt the team and knowing the stubborn streak which runs through the fiber of Carlen I doubt if it would help anyway.

"I'll play who I think is the best quarterback," says Carlen "and I'll decide. That's what I'm paid for. People only have to remember back to 1971 to see who makes the decisions about quarterbacks."

A healthy Duniven is still probably Carlen's man due to experience and maturity. But come spring training it will be fun to see who establishes himself as number one among the
