Amin postpones meeting with Americans in Uganda

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ugandan President Idi Amin has postponed his scheduled meeting with some 240 Americans in Uganda, and another date for the meeting will be announced later, according to an English language broadcast from Kampala monitored here.

The announcement gave no further details.

The meeting was scheduled for Wednesday, after having been postponed from Monday.

It was to have been held at Entebbe airport, and British residents of Uganda reportedly also were invited.

On Monday, Amin told a small group of Americans at Entebbe they were "brothers and sisters" to Ugandans and that he intended to honor them and all other Americans in the country at the Wednesday meeting.

But at the same time, the Nairobi newspaper Daily Nation reported that the 240 Americans in Uganda who had been summoned to meet with Amin were being followed day and night by armed plainclothesmen.

The State Department said Monday evening that it would have no comment on the Amin announcement the rest of the night. In fact, one source said an announcement prepared for release later in the evening had been recalled after the Uganda radio broadcast.

He would not disclose the contents of that statement, but other officials indicated it would have named an American delegate to attend the aborted Wednesday session between Amin and the Americans.

The sources also said there had been no prior knowledge of the latest delay in the conference.

In Washington, President Carter sent a message to Amin thanking him for his assurances that the lives of U.S. citizens in Uganda were not in danger. A White House spokesman said the message was sent through the West German embassy, which represents the United States in Uganda.

But there was still no response in Washington to Amin's invitation to send a U.S. diplomat to the meeting Wednesday.

These and a flurry of other reports added to the confusing array of speculation about Amin's motives and plans since, on Friday, he ordered Americans not to leave the country before meeting with him. The session was originally scheduled for Monday but then reset for Wednesday.

While insisting he plans to honor the Americans, Amin also put his troops on 24-hour alert and warned the United States against attempting a commando raid on Entebbe like the Israelis mounted last summer.

The government - controlled radio said Amin was in a "jovial mood" when he met with a group of Americans and other foreigners who work for Uganda Airlines at Entebbe airport.

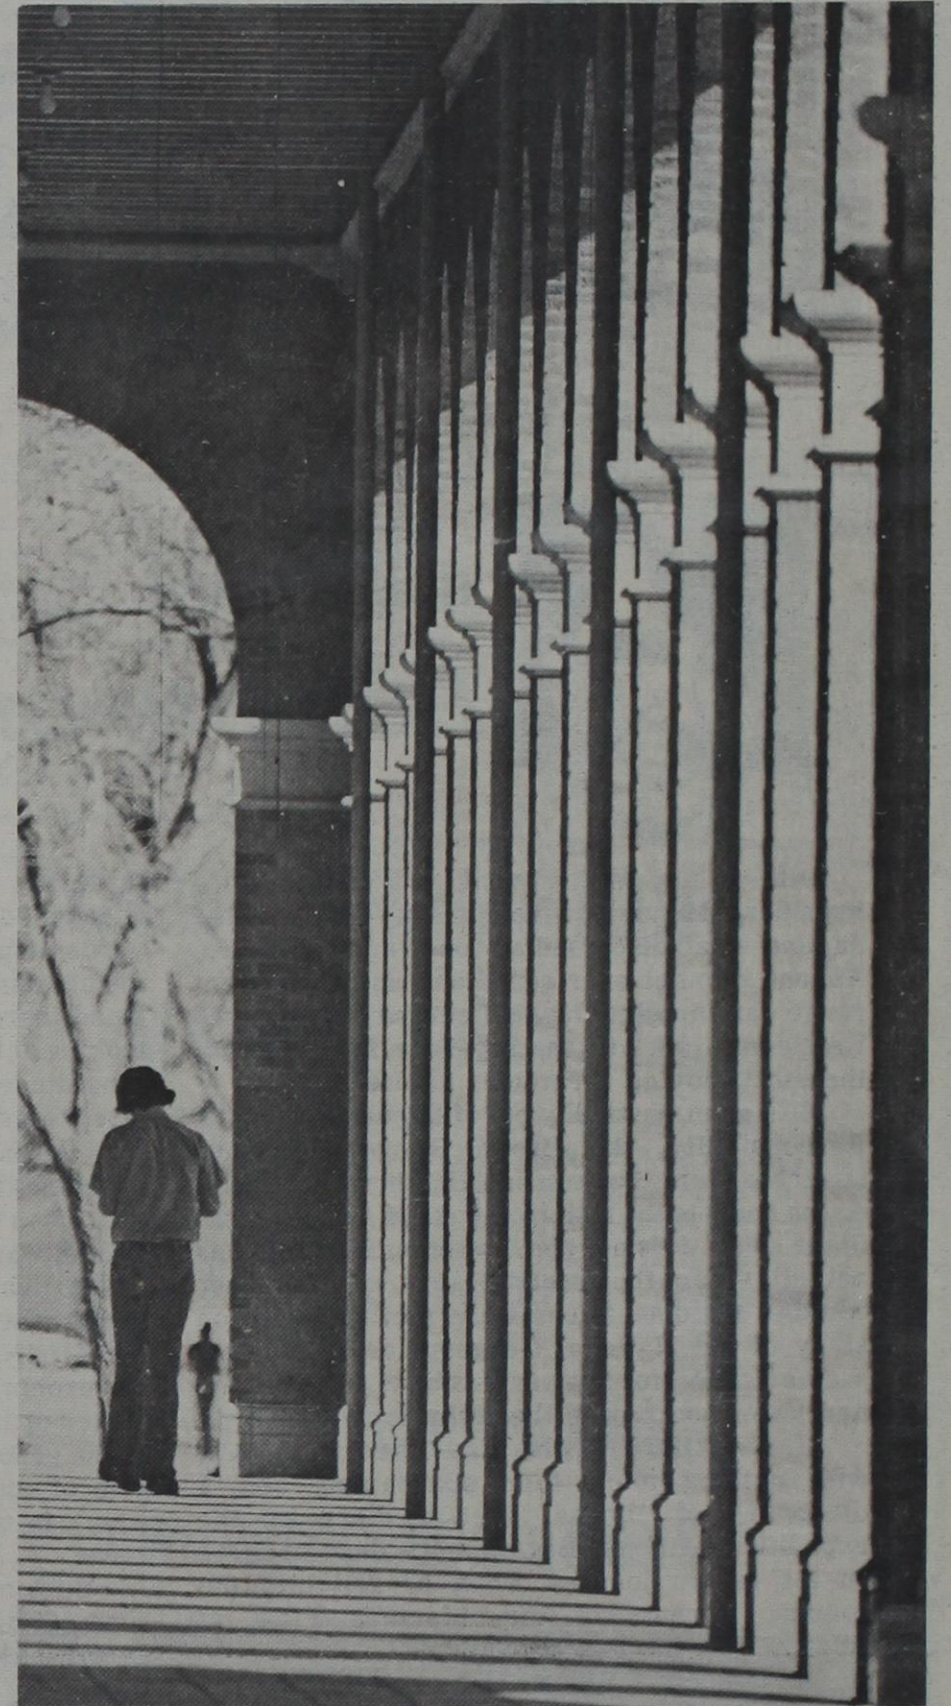

The radio said Amin told the foreigners he had summoned all Americans living in Uganda to a meeting Wednesday because he had previously met with other expatriates — "even the British" — and the Americans had been wondering why they were left out.

The broadcast said Amin also thanked American missionaries and those in other fields for taking care of the welfare of Ugandans. They and other expatriates deserve honors for their good work, he reportedly said.

The government - controlled Radio Uganda said that besides meeting with the airline workers, Amin sent a message to President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire saying he wanted to meet the Americans in Uganda "to thank them jointly for their service and not because of anything else as some people might think."

Reports reaching Nairobi indicated about 200 Britons had been summoned along with the Americans to meet with Amin at Entebbe. British diplomats said they were trying to confirm the report.

Weather or not...

If you don't like Texas weather, stick around a while, or so the old saying goes. It proved true Monday as the cold weather and dust-filled skies which had the area shrouded recently, vacated the scene in favor of the first relatively sunny day in a week. Temperatures climbed towards the 60 degree mark. (Photo by Paul Moseley.)

Program aids withdrawing frosh

By BABS GREYHOSKY
UD Reporter

Every year, about one-third of Tech's freshmen do not return for their sophomore year, according to Dr. Floyd Perry, associate vice president for academic affairs.

Finding out why they don't return is the job of the exit program committee located in the Freshmen Center. The exit program is designed to interview withdrawing students about their attitudes toward Tech and their reasons for leaving.

"Its purpose is not to try to talk the withdrawing student out of leaving the school," emphasized Sue Plyant, one of the interviewers, "although, we ask them if they have considered all alternatives to leaving."

According to Theo Lamere, who coordinates the program at the center, the exit program serves several purposes: For the students, it offers clear instructions on the procedure for withdrawing (procedure forms currently being used are incorrect, Lamere said), it clarifies the student's reasons for withdrawing, it informs the student of possible alternatives, it provides data on withdrawals for the university.

But so far, the exit committee only interviews about 20 per cent of the students who withdraw, "So the information we collect is from a small percentage," Lamere said.

Findings of the information are also highly inconclusive, according to Dr. Charles Hardwick, vice president for academic affairs. Hardwick reported to the February Board of Regents meeting some findings made by the exit committee.

Of 645 students surveyed, about 30 per cent of the withdrawing students were leaving because of financial problems, Hardwick reported.

Statistics also vary according to their interpretation, Lamere indicated. For instance, according to figures supplied by Perry, one to three per cent of engineering students withdraw, while 19-25 per cent of arts and sciences students leave Tech.

"Actually, those figures represent how many students from each of those colleges cooperated with the program and went through an exit interview," Lamere explained.

Statistics supplied by Dr. Owen Caskey, director of the office of instructional research, do not indicate much variance in the number of students withdrawing from each college.

Caskey's statistics show the College of Agriculture with the lowest percentage of withdrawals, 19.6 per cent, and the College of Business with the highest, 31.3 per cent.

To increase participation in the program, Plyant said the committee has begun enlisting the cooperation of dorm resident assistants and the registrar's office to help supply names of withdrawing students.

"Students respond to the interviews according to the reasons they are leaving," Plyant explained. "A student who is leaving Tech because of personal problems doesn't want to talk to anyone and doesn't feel it's anybody's business."

But some students who leave for various other reasons—lack of interest—will talk a lot.

Although Tech will lose 33 per cent of its students after their first year, that withdrawal rate is below the national 50 per cent average, Perry said.

Tech is also a little higher than the average retention rate of freshmen to seniors.

"We retain 43 per cent of our students through graduation, which is better than average, but not as good as we'd like to be," Perry said.

Texas A&M returns 88 per cent of its freshmen. Perry attributed this high percentage to A&M's good admissions and retention policy, good entrance requirements and highly intensive academic counseling and guidance programs.

County Commissioners okay hiring of correctional officers

By BILL BALDWIN
UD Reporter

Lubbock County Commissioners approved $89,000 for the hiring of eight additional correctional officers at the county jail in called meeting Monday.

The measure is part of the county's efforts to meet Texas Jail Standards Commission requirements that have aroused some controversy in the past few months.

In the four times the commissioners have met this year, the budget has been modified, so far expanded more than $700,000 over the original budget.

Several commissioners commented that the increased costs of the county jail and those which can be expected in the future may prompt property tax revaluations in the near future.

In other actions, the official bond of interim county commissioner Coy E. Biggs was approved. Alton Griffin, criminal district attorney, received permission to hire two additional assistant district attorneys for the new district court which is expected to begin operation April 1. The hiring of an additional deputy clerk was approved also for the new court.

The City of Lubbock proposed the county pay for rural fire calls on a per capita basis. City figures put rural county population at six per cent of 179,000 or close to 20,000. The city fire department budget this year is $4.2 million of which the county is being asked to pay $252,000.

There was some question whether the city should charge the same for rural calls because one commissioner pointed out that often the city responds with less men and equipment on rural calls. The city also proposed to form a roving patrol designed to respond specifically to rural calls.

The five-man, one-vehicle special squad, if approved, is expected to cost $160,000 to put into operation.

The question was tabled until the city-county liaison committee could meet and discuss the matter further.

A motion to participate in Project Intercept was approved after a presentation by County Juvenile Probation Officer Lloyd Watts. The program, which begins in August, will last five years and is designed to encourage juveniles to stay in school and get school dropouts back into school.

Watts said one of five juvenile delinquents are either having problems staying in school or have dropped out.

The program is funded largely by federal and state agencies. While these agencies will continue to bear the largest share of the financial costs, local schools will contribute more on a pro-rated basis after the first year and a half.

Watts said local schools will have to pay a probation officer for the program after 18 months. The Texas Criminal Division has allotted $83,000 for the five-year program here.

The commissioners also considered a new type of voting and tabulating machinery, but the matter was tabled until the county clerk and tax assessor could evaluate the several types of equipment the county has already considered.

The commission also approved County Judge Rod Shaw's letter to the city asking that the county and city be kept out of a federal manpower consortium. The city has been independently operating and federally funded manpower program for several years. Many counties have combined under private leadership programs to cope with manpower program requirements. Lubbock's program is coordinated through the Texas Department of Community Affairs.

Jury pool stays for White trial

By TERRI CULLEN
UD Reporter

A motion to have the Lubbock County jury pool thrown out was denied by 137th District Judge Robert C. Wright, in the capital murder trial of Robert Lee White. White is accused of the 1975 shotgun slayings of two former Tech employees.

White is charged with two other men in the Jan. 12, 1975, murders of Warren Andrew McKay, 64, and his wife Odessa, 55, on a road near New Deal.

McKay was a custodial worker until 1972 and his wife had worked in the University Bookstore.

Court-appointed defense attorneys John Mann and Mike Brown had claimed that District Judge William R. Shaver, presiding over the central jury pool, had denied White due process of law by dismissing prospective jurors. The dismissals were made even though an earlier motion had asked that the defense attorneys be present to object to any excuses given by potential jurors and that the 137th District Court official reporter be present to record the proceedings, according to the motion.

Mann and Brown had said the dismissals violate state jury laws. The selection of the jury is expected to begin sometime today with the individual examination of a 75-member panel by defense and prosecuting attorneys. Each side will have 15 preemptory strikes.

However, before the individual questioning, the court will continue to hear pre-trial motions to suppress a voluntary statement made by White Jan. 17, 1975, two days after the slayings.

Monday, several witnesses took the stand, including a Lubbock Independent School district coordinator of records. Three of White's IQ records were introduced.

In other action, Wright denied Mann's motion to postpone proceedings because White is allegedly mentally incompetent to stand trial. However, a jury found White sane at a Jan. 6 hearing.

Medical experts had said that White told them his actions were directed by "voices," including those of a dead girlfriend and dead grandmother.

In case of conviction, the punishment options in a capital case are life imprisonment or death in the electric chair.

Pre-trial proceedings will resume at 9 a.m. today in the 137th District Court.

Briscoe appoints McFall to new district court

Attorney John McFall has been appointed by Gov. Dolph Briscoe as judge of Lubbock's new 237th District Court.

The new court is one of 22 district courts created in the state by a bill sponsored by Briscoe and passed by the Texas Legislature Feb. 14.

The district court, the fifth in Lubbock, comes into being on April 1. McFall will take the judgeship at that time.

McFall said he knew he was one of many being considered for the position by Briscoe.

"I'm flattered, yet awed with all the responsibilities there are," McFall said. "Come April 1, I'll be ready to go."

McFall has been a resident of Lubbock for 20 years, following his graduation from the University of Texas Law School.

McFall will fill the appointment of the judgeship until the next general election in 1978. At that time, McFall said he will run for election.

Have you heard the one about...?

The job requires hours of study. It can mean plenty of trips away from home and family, and it can occupy full days and keep people up until late hours hassling over million-dollar projects and bending under political pressures. The job lasts for six years. And worst of all, the wages are lousy—there are none.

But for some reason, according to just about "everybody" these days, scores of people are clamoring to get hired for this job.

The job is being a member of the Tech Board of Regents.

Board Chairman Judson Williams: "There are more people interested in this board than ever before."

A Tech lobbyist: "So many people want to be a member of this board, it's unbelievable." Public Affairs Director Bill Parsley: "A lot of pressure is being exerted to get certain people on this board."

And board member Don Workman sums it all up with, "I can't imagine why anyone would solicit a position on the board of regents of any university."

Why is there so much drama surrounding the appointment of three Tech regents? The outgoing regents (unless reappointments make them ingoing again) Clint Formby of Hereford, Dr. John Hinchey of San Antonio and Bill Collins of Lubbock created quite a stir when their terms expired Jan. 31.

Since Gov. Dolph Briscoe has been taking his time with a selection, everyone is trying to second-guess him. And, as a result of the delay, all kinds of rumors have been circulating, which are attributed to that all-omniscient source known as "observers at the capital" or "official in Austin."

Having hassled with the regents appointments for about a month now, I decided the average reader doesn't relate well to journalistic devices designed to disguise what is, for all practical purposes, "I heard it through the grapevine" approach to news coverage.

So, in an attempt to rectify the confusing situation and put the problem in proper perspective, here's the story behind the regents selection process, complete with "and then I heard" and "someone said this" and "did you know?" And if it ends up sounding like Rona Barrett in Hollywood, it should. The only difference is that this is Austin, which automatically makes everything a lot more gossipy.

First of all, Briscoe is in a pretty precarious situation. He has to appoint his own men to these important posts if he wants to have a good chance at another term as governor, so I hear.

The biggest threat to Briscoe at this point would be for Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to oppose him in the election. The word is that Hobby would be a tough opponent, and for Briscoe not to have some of his right-hand men close by (like at his right hand), support might be hard to solicit.

So what does all that mean? Well, "they" said reappointments of Formby and Hinchey would be pretty unlikely (Collins already emphatically indicated he wanted no part of a third term on the board), especially since both these men are appointees of former governor Preston Smith.

Which brings us to the third point (maybe fourth, but who's counting?), Smith's hints about running for governor again. This is where Briscoe has really got to be careful: should he not reappoint some of Smith's men, for fear of putting Smith supporters in influential places, or should he go ahead and reappoint, hoping to draw support from some of Smith's clan?

Now I also heard Briscoe really messed up royally when he made the appointments for the University of Texas. That action prompted one Tech official to comment, "I sure can't figure that guy out."

Briscoe did not reappoint Mrs. Lyndon Johnson to the UT board, but he did manage to appoint his own personal physician instead. Not a wise move, Dolph. Now you have all the Longhorns mad at you. Ladybird hasn't said anything, but I hear her friends are furious.

Briscoe also has to contend with different factions pressing for their own men or women. Chicanos want a Chicano on the board. But some Chicanos want men, some Chicanos want women, and some Chicanos want doctors. And the medical field won't be satisfied with just a doctor — it either has to be a doctor from Lubbock, or one from Galveston, or a reappointment of Hinchey.

In light of this analysis alone, one can see that Briscoe has his hands full. Some people feel the sooner a selection is made, the healthier it will be for the school. But then others think the longer the governor takes to reach a decision, the better the chances are for some of our regents to be reappointed.

All this sounds pretty merry, but the real fun comes with trying to figure out when Briscoe will announce his decision. His own appointments secretary claims not to know a thing (ees not my job, man), but just about everybody in Austin "has an idea" when the big word will come down. "At the end of the session," "Thursday" (it doesn't matter which one) and "the latter part of this week" have been popular guesses so far.

So what do all these rumors, these countless speculations, and these off-the-cuff guesses mean? It means we don't know who the new regents will be until Briscoe tells us.

Now aren't you glad you asked?

Heights of absurdity

After his recent visit to Tokyo, Vice President Mondale revealed that he and the Japanese had discussed a broad range of issues. Anyone who has ever gazed on this magnificent range can imagine the poetic nature of the Vice President's talk with the Japanese, for it is one of the most moving spectacles nature affords.

Rising majestically out of the bleak Areas of Responsibility, the Broad Range of Issues stretches from the amusing Height of Absurdity on the north to the historic Peaks of Achievement in the south. It is not clear whether Mondale has actually seen the Broad Range of Issues or whether his discussions were merely based on study of old National Geographics. The latter seems likelier, for few persons have survived the harrowing journey to that remote paradise.

T. E. BURTON, who made the trip in 1923, with nothing more than six camels and a dictionary of cliches, kept a diary of the expedition. Although Burton met a deadful death on his return journey when he fell into the roaring torrents of the infamous Flow of Information, his diary survived.

At his death, Burton was exploring for the mysterious Reliable Sources, where he believed the Flow of Information originated. Burton's expedition to the Broad Range of Issues started from the east and ran into trouble almost immediately as it passed into the steamy Erogenous Zones. His diary, feverishly sketchy at this point, describes months of struggle to climb out of the squalid Depths of Degradation, which pitted the Zone's landscape.

Indeed, he might have died there had he not seen, one cold winter night, an extraordinary display of the beautiful Rising Expectations light the western sky. Reinvigorated by this atmospheric spectacle, he hauled himself out of the Erogenous Zones and found himself breathing a strangely baffling air.

THIS, AS subsequent geographers have discovered, was the inexplicable Air of Mystery, which blows off the mosquito - infested Miasma of Suspicion and Hate. Luckily for Burton, the sky was clear that night and he was able to navigate safely around the Miasma by following the familiar, if somewhat tired, Aura of Romance, which shimmered in the southern sky.

The southern detour, however, carried him directly into the dreaded Sands of Time, where he wandered for years, surviving only because his camels had taught him how to store water in his hump. One day he stumbled into an orchard. It seemed a mirage, for scarcely a hundred yards distant lay another orchard. Burton sent his camels to explore it for reality, and as they stood there looking at his orchard and he stood looking at their orchard, he suddenly realized the magnitude of his accomplishment. He had discovered the Fruitful Exchange of Views.

Refreshed in spirit, he plunged ahead, ignoring the terrors of the notorious Political Extremes to his left and to his right, and noticed that he was approaching a series of well-defined levels. These, of course, were the well-charted Income Levels - Lower, Middle and Upper.

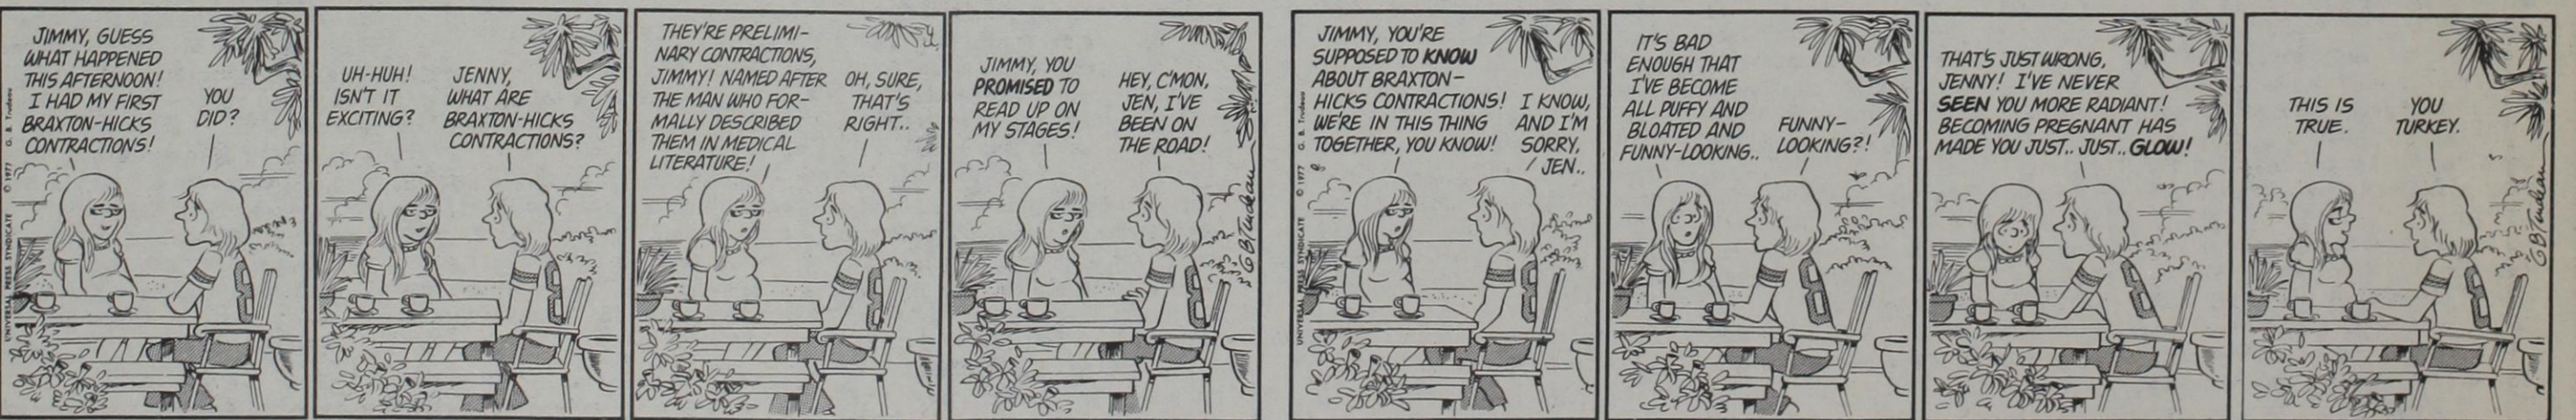

THEN, IN A TERRIFYING instant of atmospheric violence, Burton was abruptly picked up into the air and just as abruptly hurled to the ground. We now know that he was in the grip of the whimsical Unanticipated Windfall, which is quite common at the Upper Income Level.

Burton, however, was determined to reach New Heights, an elevation from which, according to ancient lore, one could catch a glimpse of the Areas of Responsibility. Burton spent weeks struggling upward, always upward, and when he at last reached the summit, satisfied that he had reached either New Heights or the equally rewarding Higher Level of Understanding, he fell into a stuporous sleep.

On awaking, he found a graffito cut into rock. It said, "Chauvinist pigs to the wall." This was not New Heights. It was simply Raised Consciousness, and Burton realized that he was looking out on the world from the Feminist Viewpoint. "At last," he noted in his diary, "it is better than finding myself at the Unorthodox View."

The following year, Burton crossed the Chasm of Misunderstanding, canoed down the Labor Pool and hurled himself through the Language Barrier with such force that he plunged into the fetid Emotional Depression. Only his fierce resolve to enter New Fields of Endeavor kept him going, and when at last he entered the always stimulating New Fields, he met a speech writer who gave him his first glimpse of the Broad Range of Issues from the ancient Well-Balanced Perspective. "Some day," the awe-struck Burton predicted, "this range will be discussed even by Vice Presidents." Not even Burton, of course, could have realized the Japanese would join in.

SMU revamps basic English

DALLAS (AP) — Faced with the possible irony of college graduates not being able to read or write well, Southern Methodist University educators have revamped their basic English program for freshmen and sophomores.

The new program emphasizes basic writing skills. Laura Devlin, a freshman English instructor, said the previous program was over the heads of many students who stumbled over problems with simple spelling, grammar, and punctuation.

"Many have a poor sense of what a sentence is," Ms. Devlin said. "There's a tremendous ignorance of the rules of grammar."

Some SMU professors feel the basic skills deficiency is rooted in secondary education. When asked if SMU was taking in lower quality students, Dr. John Maguire, an associate dean, said, "The problem with written communication is not so much a reflection of the students we're getting in, but more a legacy of what's going on in secondary schools. They're simply not requiring students to write papers. This is reflected in nationwide trends, including schools like Harvard and Stanford. It's not a reflection that we're taking lower quality students."

Citizens disagree at hearing

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dallas banker and a Boston lawyer disagreed Monday over whether a small loan bill would be a boon to customers or lenders.

They testified at the first public hearing on Sen. Don Adams' proposal to adopt a new formula for figuring interest rates on loans up to $5,000.

Adams and his adversary, Sen. Bill Patman, D-Ganado, were on opposite sides of a horseshoe-shaped committee table, although Patman is not a committee member.

Fighting loan rate increases has been Patman's crusade for years, and his wife, Carrin, joked that she had him out jogging in preparation for another round.

Mrs. Patman was in the audience Monday, and an aide to Patman took photographs of spectators at the hearing of the Senate Economic Development Committee.

China's birth control successful

TOKYO (AP) — China, the world's most populous nation, says it is successfully limiting growth by following the birth control advice of the late Mao Tse-tung and not his disgraced widow.

Neighboring India, the second most populous nation, meanwhile is abandoning a sterilization program under political pressures.

The Chinese rate of population growth "has gone down year by year since 1965 because of the promotion of birth control," Hsinhua, the official Chinese news agency, said over the weekend.

It said annual growth rates of 2.5 per cent in Hopei and Kiangsu provinces in 1965 had dropped to around one per cent, while the populous cities of Shanghai and Peking showed rates below 0.6 per cent.

The agency gave no figures for China as a whole. No exact figure has been given on China's population, but Hsinhua and other publications usually set it at 800 million.

WSO to sponsor Women's Fair

Discovery Through Sharing—A Women's Fair, will be conducted Wednesday and Thursday from 9 a.m.-10 p.m. in the University Center, according to Cynthia Siegfried, chairman of the Women's Fair.

The Women's Fair, sponsored by Women's Service Organization, will have two parts. A fair will be in the University Center Ballroom consisting of booths managed by campus organizations and a series of workshops with guest lecturers.

Siegfried said WSO is always doing things for other organizations, never for themselves. "The Women's Fair is something the members do for themselves," she said.

The purpose of the fair is to give people a chance to meet and exchange ideas and information.

The workshops will cover such topics as abortion, the ERA, pros and cons of the draft pardon, problem solving methods in marriage and concerns of undergraduate women.

Carolyn Jordan, Lubbock City Councilwoman, will speak about "Women's Involvement in Local Politics."

Also, there will be a relaxation training workshop and a demonstration by American Handicrafts. A sheet listing the time and place of each workshop is available at the Red Tape Cutting Center in the UC.

"Even though this is a women's fair, there are areas that will interest both men and women," Siegfried said.

Booths for the fair will be available until Wednesday morning to any Tech organization or group. The cost is $3 per booth.

For information concerning reserving a booth, contact Lydia Petroff, 742-7488, or Cynthia Siegfried, 744-6008.

Army changes mobilization strategy

By ROSEMARY ROBINSON UD Staff

In the next war involving the United States, the first battle could well be the last.

According to the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Briefing Team, the Army probably will not have time for mobilization after open hostility—war—begins.

"We don't know where the U.S. Army will again be called into battle," said Capt. Conrad H. Busch, Jr., TRADOC Briefing Team chief. "The Army today must prepare to fight and win the first battle."

Army officials have made a change in strategy to keep up with new technology requiring rapid mobilization, one team member said.

In 1973 the Department of the Army eliminated the Continental Army Command, replacing it with TRADOC and Forces Command. The two divisions were designed to separate organization and training from actual fighting, according to the team.

Duties of the briefing team include travelling around the country and explaining what TRADOC is doing, Busch said.

"As in the past, we present a 40-45 minute presentation designed to familiarize both civilian and military audiences with the missions and functions of TRADOC," Busch said.

Busch, with the aid of TRADOC Briefing Officer Capt. Stephen G. Milburn, explained the roles of TRADOC to approximately 100 ROTC cadets Thursday. Staff Sgt. Gary L. Dorrough assisted with a slide show and film on Army training.

The presentation explained TRADOC is divided into Combat Development and Training, the team said. Combat Development is in charge of organization and deciding how the Army will fight and be equipped. Combat Development has developed a Big Five Weapon

System to improve battlefield lethality, the team said. The system includes advanced attack helicopters, main battle tanks, mechanized infantry combat vehicles, a utility tactical transport aircraft system and surface-to-air missile development.

Individual training utilizes manuals, training extension courses and skill qualification tests. Collective or unit training produces mission-ready teams, Busch said.

The Army has four sources of commissioned officers, the team said. Officers are trained through Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC), Officers Candidate School, the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and direct commissioning.

The team was in the Lubbock area Feb. 21-24. Briefings were at Reese AFB, in Canyon and in the Lubbock area, Busch said.

Times theatre review

Forum' fabulous

A funny thing happened on the way to this review.

I encountered one of the funniest, craziest and most enjoyable works of entertainment I've seen at Tech — "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum." (playing through Wednesday at the Tech Theatre).

JOHNNY HOLMES

It's a forum all right. A forum for lots of laughs and plenty of good times.

The catalyst for a majority of the giggles back in good ol' ancient Rome is a hilariously clever and fast talking slave named Pseudolus (played by Tom Francis) who seeks his freedom by wheeling and dealing — and I mean wheeling and dealing. Pseudolus is seemingly always in a funny fix but never fails to come out smelling like a rose (and sometimes mare's sweat).

At first the plot seems to be included only as an excuse to involve all the characters, of which there are plenty. But as the comedy commences, it becomes obvious that every little detail has its place and that everything will come together in the end. And boy, does it.

Lyricist Stephen Sondheim is definitely to be credited with his clever and creative comedic concoction, and from beginning to end, the play is nonstop mayhem. His lead song, "Comedy Tonight," is so terribly catchy that I still find myself humming it subconsciously from time to time. His philosophy is that now is the time for comedy and believe me, that's what you'll get. It seems as if the play could succeed even if performed by the shoddiest of companies.

But the shoddiest of companies is exactly what the Tech group is not. They are masterful, individually and collectively, from top to bottom.

Some of the couples in particular slayed me. For example, tall, buxom (what a bust) Ginger Perkins playing opposite her cheeseball of a Roman husband, David Zepeda. Zepeda is particularly cute as Senex, the master of the house who quit watching his weight because he couldn't pry his eyes from the sweet young virgin played by Heather Hollingsworth.

Casting is superb all the way through, and several characters proved totally outstanding. Matt Posey poses as Marcus Lycus, the local flesh and pleasure dealer who shows a little bit of everything with his Roman cathouse. And his girls... I'll bet the National Archives would pay a mint for that collection.

Posey was sort of a bad guy last time around ("Gaslight") and indeed, his character here isn't all that straightforward but he's a whole lot funnier, even stooping to pose as a part time leper. And he's definitely the best finger-waver in "Everybody Ought To Have A Maid."

Even better is Lynn Mathis as Miles Gloriosus. This grandioso Roman soldier come to claim his bride is nothing short of outrageous, and Mathis (also last seen in "Gaslight") is as superb in his acting as Sondheim was in his creation of the role. From his opening fanfare to his Nixon imitations to his "eek" on the balcony, Mathis is sheer madness.

But the real show stopper is Pseudolus, portrayed with timely wit and seemingly endless energy by Francis. I was amazed at his stamina more than anything else as his role is perhaps the most demanding I've seen this year. For two solid hours, Francis is running this Roman rollercoaster with flair and some fancy footwork. The guy never lets up. Not once during his performance did his acting slip, not even an expression when he was off to the side. Even his voice was better than most, nand easily good enough to fill the bill.

The bit characters do well also. The old guy who spends his time searching for his long lost kids, and running around the seven hills is a hilarious addition, and even Senex and Domina's son, Hero, whose role is small but important, is okay.

If there is a flaw at all, it's in the music as the trumpeters had trouble handling some of the softer passages, but all in all the play is perhaps the finest bit of local entertainment to grace a stage since "Camelot." Maybe this should have been the season's finale because I don't see how the Tech Theatre can top a performance like this.

UC talent, one acts still open

Tryouts for the directing class' one act plays will be held this weekend and are open to the campus. Auditions will be held from 7 to 11 p.m. Friday and 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday. Callbacks will be Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m., and all auditions will be held in the Agricultural Engineering Auditorium. For more information call the Theatre at 2-3601.

Also, the deadline for the UC Talent Show, "That's Entertainment Part III," has been extended to this Friday at 5 p.m. If you've got any sort of an act, you can still enter.

Bleacher bums & orange alums

Baseball - wise it's a whole new world. Travelling down Martin Luther King Drive towards Interstate 35, the castle looks as awesome as I'd been told it was. Disch-Falk Field in Austin is the home stadium of the Texas baseball team. Home palace is more descriptive.

Inside your own Raiders were preparing to play the nationally powerful Texas Longhorns in the SWC opener for both teams. I walked inside the baseball mansion and couldn't believe it. The playing surface is AstroTurf and the warning track by the fences is made of rubberized Tartan material.

The stands are nicer than Arlington Stadium, although there are "only" 5,000 seats, all chair backs of course.

I WAS TRYING to draw comparisons between Tech's baseball field and Texas', but I can't think clearly when I'm laughing. The trouble is it's not funny.

At the first game Friday there were a couple thousand fans on hand and, ironically, there were about a hundred Tech fans, about as many as the Raiders sometimes draw at home.

I was surprised at how many Texas fans were not Texas students. I made a group of my Longhorn friends go to the game and they amazed me by admitting it was their first game ever.

But the hard-cores were there. The people you read about but wonder if they really exist. Orange leisure suits with bright orange cowboys hats and orange and white boots. They looked just like the real cowboys of the late 1800s...

Except the real cowboys didn't have orange and white Caddies parked outside.

Of the small percentage of students at the game, the most (or only) vocal group was the Bleacher Bums, a rowdy crowd that gave the Raider players a vocally bad time. They were a predictably obnoxious group, but highly entertaining to the rest of the crowd. I guessed that some type of bus went up and down the drag picking up degenerates, and taking them en masse to the game to be themselves.

WENDELL HIBBETT, one of the Texas' power hitters, slapped one over the fence with the bases loaded to ice the first game for the Horns. As he rounded third base, he was given a standing ovation by all the Hook 'ems in the house. I sat expressionless until one girl clapping near me asked (sincerely asked) why everyone was applauding. I explained that her team had just scored some points and she shrieked, "We did? Goody!" and clapped louder.

I laughed ... but again, it really wasn't funny. Should of smashed her face. Here was this $2.5 million complex full with bleacher bums, orange alums and girls without brains.

The Horns won the game 9-3 and the next day there was a double-header. The Raiders suffered a heartbreak loss in the opener. Tech held a 5-3 lead with two out in the bottom of the ninth when Texas scored on a passed ball at home. The tying run was knocked in and the winning run came as the next two Longhorn batters were walked, the second forced in the winning run.

The final game saw the Horns run away from what was left of the Tech team, 11-0. The bleacher bums went crazy in that game. It really is easier to come down on someone who is already down. Everyone knows that.

THE WINNING PITCHER of that heartbreak game was Tony Brizzolara, a man who had no business winning the game.

After the 6-5 game, Brizzolara was asked why he felt the Longhorns won the contest. His humility floored me.

"We won because we're Texas," he said.

Women's tennis team takes upset victory

By LISA BURGHER UD Sportswriter

Techsan netters Mamie Bevers and Joneen Cummings pulled off an upset victory in the consolation tennis finals of the Texas Women's Intercollegiate Sectionals last weekend as they bounced back to beat Gina Alvarado and Colleen Scanlon of Northeast Louisiana University, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Bevers-Cummings lost their opening match to Ann Ellis and Carol Reger of LSU, but after that the duo was unstoppable. They defeated the Aggies' Elise Richardson and Susan Schilling 8-4, then downed Jane Hirsch and Ann Taliberto of Florida State University, 6-3, 6-3, to advance to the finals.

The Raiders' next competition will be at Odessa College March 3.

Netters undefeated

Tech's tennis team blew into Abilene last weekend and came away with two wins in dual meets to extend its unblemished record to 4-0.

On Friday, the Raiders defeated Hardin-Simmons 5-4. After a good night's sleep in dry Abilene, they crushed Abilene Christian University 8-1.

Against Hardin-Simmons, the Raider netters split the singles competition 3-3 and won the meet with a 2-1 doubles mark.

This weekend the Raiders travel to Norman, Oklahoma to play a pair of dual meets

Baseballers host Hardin-Simmons

Tech's baseballers will entertain the Hardin-Simmons Cowboys this afternoon in a doubleheader, beginning at 2 p.m.

Tech played Hardin-Simmons earlier in the season, losing three of the four games played.

Tech, 5-6 on the season, will use its entire staff excluding Doug House, who pitched against Texas on Saturday. According to Head Coach Kal Segrist, House is nursing a sore ankle and a tired arm. The sore ankle came as a result of a line shot off the bat of a Longhorn hitter.

Tech's lineup for the Cowboys is: first base, Gary Ashby; second base, Bubba Nix or Johnny Vestal; shortstop, Brooks Wallace or Larry Selby; third base Ernie Helweg; left field, Bryan Cowan; centerfield Gary Sims or John Keller; right field Paul Johnston; and catching, Robert Harris or Scott Leimgruber. Filling the designated hitting role for the Raiders today will most likely be Pat Foster, Mike Bewley or the aforementioned Sims.
