

NHLBI finds no basis for complaints against Orem

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

A team of fact-finding scientists under the direction of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute (NHLBI) has reported that it found no basis for complaints lodged by animal rights activists against John Orem, a physiology professor at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC).

According to the NHLBI report, delivered to the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and released this week to the TTUHSC, Orem's use of cats to study neural control of breathing and Sudden Infant Death Syndrome "is in accord with Public Health Service policies for use and care of animals in research."

The NHLBI report described Orem's animal protocol as exemplary and stated that the "Texas Tech University review process that assures protection of animals used in research is a model of excellence."

Orem's research and the TTUHSC's use of animals in biomedical research came under fire when animal rights activists connected with the Animal Liberation Front burglarized Orem's research facilities and destroyed more than $70,000 in equipment and materials.

Last month, a six-member team appointed by the NHLBI inspected Orem's lab and reviewed the TTUHSC's animal welfare policies.

After assessing the merits of Orem's research, the investigating team concluded that his efforts did not unnecessarily duplicate other research and that the technology and procedures used by Orem was state-of-the-art.

According to the report, "the procedures used (by the TTUHSC) for managing animal research with respect to training of personnel, implementation, review and safeguards are exemplary."

Orem could not be reached for comment, but in a statement issued Wednesday he said he was encouraged by the report's conclusions and hopeful that concerned citizens will understand that the accusations against him were unfounded.

Dr. Kenneth Barker, vice president for research and academic support and associate dean for graduate studies at the TTUHSC, said in a telephone interview with The University Daily he was pleased the NHLBI conducted the investigation and found the research program at the TTUHSC to be in line with federal regulations concerning animal research.

"We have always thought we had an exemplary program, and I'm pleased the fact-finding team that came out agreed with us," Barker said.

Barker said he hopes the report's conclusions will put to rest the debate concerning Orem's use of animals in biomedical research, but he said animal rights groups probably will not be satisfied with the investigation.

"I think the people initiating the debate have not listened to facts up to this point," Barker said. "They have a very strong opinion in opposition to the use of animals in any research, and this report is not going to convince them to change their minds."

Barker said, however, the report will give the public a clear message that the research at the TTUHSC is in line with regulations concerning animal care.

Suzanne McMinn, president of the Tech Animal Rights Coalition, said she was glad an investigation into Orem's research was conducted. She said the real issue is not necessarily Orem's research but rather the strength of federal guidelines concerning the use of research animals.

"I don't think this is about Orem's research, because most research does fall under the guidance of animal use regulatory boards," she said. "The issue is whether to strengthen the federal guidelines, and that is something that still needs work."

Barker said the NHLBI's positive report says loud and clear that the TTUHSC has a credible program that will enable the institution to continue to conduct high-quality biomedical research that meets the spirit of animal protection legislation.

"We have said all along that we have an exemplary program, and with the report in hand, this gives us a way to confirm that we were right all along," he said.

Pasadena: 5 dead, 17 missing

By The Associated Press

PASADENA — Investigators searching for the cause of the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant explosion discovered three more bodies in the charred rubble of the plant Wednesday and continued the search for 17 others presumed killed in the blast.

In all, five bodies have been found since a series of explosions ripped through the plastics plant.

On Wednesday, the body of one of three contract workers unaccounted for since the explosions was found in a maintenance area in the morning, said Phillip Witt, a company spokesman.

The two other bodies were found separately later in the day, but both were in the same vicinity near a storage area for poly-ethylene pellets, said Bill Wicker, another company spokesman.

Wicker said the first worker who was found Wednesday worked for Fish Engineering, a subcontractor for Phillips, but he did not have his name. There was no answer at the Fish Engineering office in Houston.

Workers used cranes, hydraulic shears and other heavy equipment Wednesday to clear some of the rubble at the complex, but the process was slowed by the fact that many bodies are believed to be in the wreckage.

"There are a number of safety aspects we have to take before we can clear everything up," Young said. "If there was nobody in there, we'd have 90 percent of this cleared up."

Company officials also learned that another man listed as missing was not at the plant at the time of Monday's blast, said plant manager Robert Benz.

The identities of the dead have not been released by Phillips. One body was found Monday night and the second victim was discovered Tuesday.

Assistant Secretary of Labor John Scannell, who heads the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, toured the plant Wednesday with other federal investigators called in by U.S. Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

"It's total devastation," Scannell said. "In 30 years of experience in the chemical industry, I've never seen such massive equipment twisted and strung about."

"It's still a very hazardous situation with twisted steel and columns, the total destruction of some parts — you can only imagine the force of the explosion. Bolts were sheared right off and twisted like pretzels," Scannell said.

OSHA had a team of 15 investigators, including chemical and structural engineers, at the site. Scannell said the federal workers will help with recovery operations and offer technical assistance and advice.

Lawless attends foundation banquet

By LEANNA EFIRD
The University Daily

Texas Tech President Robert Lawless attended a banquet Monday in support of the Robert A. Welch Foundation, which provided more than $404,000 in funding for chemistry research at Tech in the 1989 fiscal year.

The annual event was sponsored in Houston in honor of a professor from the California Institute of Technology who was the 1989 recipient of the Welch Award — a $225,000 grant given to an outstanding achiever in chemistry research. Presentations are made at the banquet each year from chemical research experts from all over the world.

The foundation grants funds to full-time tenured faculty at educational research institutions and can support no other research than basic chemistry. The foundation also provides chemistry scholarships for students and endowed chairs for professors. The Welch Award, however, is given to a researcher outside the state.

The foundation was established in 1954 by Robert Alonzo Welch, who donated more than $25 million to the foundation to promote chemical research in Texas.

Since its founding, the foundation has appropriated almost $200 million in chemical research grants to 50 Texas colleges and universities.

Assets for the foundation have grown to more than $259 million, placing the foundation among the 50 largest in the country.

Tech has 20 research grants from the foundation totaling more than $400,000 and an endowed chair position that accumulates interest from $1 million.

Richard Bartsch, a Horn professor and chairman of the chemistry and biochemistry department, said Tech is gaining a more prestigious reputation in the field of research through the foundation.

"The Welch prize has become similar in stature to the Nobel prize in Chemistry," he said. "Tech is becoming more established as a research institute."

Bartsch has been researching metal ion complexing agents for the past eight years through a grant from the foundation. The research is valuable to the chemical industry and environmental cleanup efforts, Bartsch said.

"The Welch Foundation has had a tremendous impact of the advancement of chemistry research in Texas," he said.

ICASALS' research brings Tech worldwide acclaim

By CORTCHIE WELCH
The University Daily

The general expertise of faculty and staff, the commitment of university administrators and the support of state legislators are a few factors that have led to the tremendous growth of Texas Tech's International Center for Arid and Semi-Arid Land Studies (ICASALS), an administrator says.

The center, established by the university to study the influence arid and semi-arid land has on human environments, is a success due to university officials committed to the program, said Idris Traylor, director of ICASALS.

"The arid lands' mission of the university — having been identified — gave a focus on which growth could be based," said Traylor, who also is executive director of international affairs at Tech. "The center actively sought external funding and the development of our resources here at the university."

"This combination, along with the expertise of the faculty in so many areas related to human experiences in arid environments, is what made possible that growth." Traylor said the international center always has made progress since its inception in 1966 and he says he expects the center to continue to make headway.

ICASALS director

Idris Traylor, director of ICASALS, attributes the success of the program to the commitment of the administrators and the support of state legislators.

Tech has received commendation from every corner of the world — including the Far East, Europe, Africa and Latin America — for having an arid lands mission and ICASALS, he said.

"Often, people don't remember what ICASALS, means but they know ICASALS," Traylor said.

He said water becomes a problem in arid lands whether the natural resource is used for humans or agriculture in how to attain and adapt lifestyles to inherent water shortages.

A desert environment is a fragile one, said Traylor, a history professor who teaches graduate courses in arid studies. Misuse or abuse of arid environments by humans often causes deterioration of the environment.

"This is true everywhere in the world, including the United States," he said. "It is particularly true in Africa and Latin America. That's largely because of overgrazing by animals and also the cutting of forest for building or firewood."

Deterioration of arid lands, Traylor said, agitates the cycle by which trees have to regenerate the environment.

The disadvantage in West Texas is the mining of underground water that comes from an aquifer called Ogallala. The mining of underground resources for irrigated agriculture led to depletion of the area's water supply, he said.

The aquifer, the largest in the world, recently has risen to a normal state due to farmers' return to dryland farming.

He said the area offers major natural resources in an environment conducive to agriculture that has made West Texas a wealthy region.

"Consequently, this a very pleasant place in which to live," Traylor said. "The air is clean, the sky is clear and is a majestic country with great horizons."

One of many unsurpassed events Traylor has seen, the center experience, over the years, is acquiring national and international attention.

Broad-based support given to ICASALS is another alluring event Traylor said he has observed through the years with more than 150 faculty members officially associated with ICASALS who research matter concerning arid and semi-arid environments, organize conferences and symposiums and include arid and semi-arid lands dimension to their classes.

Expanding the interdisciplinary studies in arid land graduate program, international development contracts and a world wide information exchange program are some of the things ICASALS will aim for in coming years.

In the 23 years ICASALS has been in existence, he said, the center has received more than 16,000 items pertaining to arid and semi-arid which are at the library.

Court reverses murder case

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals on Wednesday reversed the murder conviction of a man in the beating death of a Texas Tech University student but upheld the death penalty in a San Antonio murder case.

In the April 1975 slaying of Tech engineering student Mike McMahon, Ronald Curtis Chambers was sentenced to death after trial testimony showed he and an accomplice abducted McMahon and a date from a Dallas nightclub.

McMahon, 22, and Dia Sutton, his date, were taken to the Trinity River, where they were clubbed to death with a shotgun after being robbed and shot.

The couple survived the initial attack. But when McMahon called to Miss Sutton to see if she was alive, Chambers and his companion reportedly returned and killed him.

Clarence Ray Williams, Chambers' companion, got a life sentence in the Dallas County case.

In the San Antonio case, Vernon Lamar Sattiewhite was convicted in the June 1986 shooting death of Sandra Sorrell, his former girlfriend.

Victims need assistance, preparation

Hold on to your Stetsons for a real shocker — I have a prediction: There is going to be another big earthquake in California. Surprise. It might not be this afternoon, or tomorrow, or next week, or even next year — but there will be one. And it will rain in Seattle, and snow in Minnesota, and Charleston will even have another hurricane.

The reason for the early warning is so those who choose to build a $750,000 house on the San Andreas Fault can spend a little extra and buy some earthquake insurance.

I might sound insensitive to some people who have read this far. I really do care about those who have suffered these past weeks. I am truly impressed by the warm outpouring of assistance by communities all across our country. However, I do find it hard to be sympathetic toward those who had the means to be prepared — yet failed to. The government now must write a blank check to pay for the damage, which easily will surpass the early $5 billion estimates.

All I have heard since third grade geography is how California is due for the "big one." Well, one struck — not the "big one," but a medium one. There are many who were left homeless — and they need our compassion and assistance. But I couldn't help but notice one lady being interviewed in front of her million-dollar country home. She whined about her loss and how slow the government was in helping her out. "Where is George Bush?" she pleaded, "Why wasn't the government prepared?" The commentator added that the lady had lost everything, including her Lilaque crystal — and had no insurance. Who wasn't prepared?

Let me suggest this — when we pass out the five billion, maybe we could show the people of California what insurance is all about. We could put on workshops and mail out brochures. Hell, we could even fly a few of the obnoxious insurance salesmen who continually call on me and let them walk the California fault lines with policies in hand. And why not pay the first few premiums — just to show them how it is done. Maybe then, when the big one strikes, that same lady can stand in front of what remains of her house, and as she shows America how she and her little dog Fifi survived, she can proudly tell all of America how she purchased insurance, and she won't wonder why George Bush isn't busy lining up construction crews to rebuild her home for her.

Oh, by the way — I sure hope those of you reading this in West Texas are ready too, because the "big one" is coming. No, not an earthquake — but a tornado that will send Dorothy flying back to Kansas. So be sure and buy a little peace of mind. That way, you won't look stupid whining about how "I never thought this would happen to me — where is the check Uncle Sam?" I sure hope it doesn't, but a little preparation can't hurt.

Soviet-style capitalism mints kickback system

William Safire
Columnist

WASHINGTON — If you were a racketeer seeking huge monetary reward with little potential of getting caught, what racket would you choose and where would you go?

Forget drugs and Central America. Forget insider trading and Wall Street. The racket and place with real growth potential is in speculating in the interstices of perestroika in today's Soviet Union.

In Leningrad last week, and again in Riga, capital of Soviet-occupied Latvia, I heard the Italian word "mafia" used frequently.

It does not signify the Italian crime organization, or its American offshoot, whose venality Western moviegoers have come to venerate. To Soviet citizens, the mafia is the spreading underground organization of speculatori and corrupt apparatchiks.

This economic cancer has long been growing, but with the advent of the first stage of perestroika — 1 percent of whoopee capitalism in an otherwise rigidly controlled economy — the cancer has metastasized.

To introduce a productive market system after 70 years of state-owned decline, Mikhail Gorbachev permitted the creation of a relatively few "cooperatives" — markets and restaurants operated for profit, often in real Western money.

As intended, this created a class of entrepreneurs.

Perhaps not as intended, the new capitalists were given monopolies by bureaucrats in charge of scarce goods.

Result: a combination of business and politics that has perfected the kickback economy.

The Soviet mafia prospers in the midst of general adversity. At fixed-price state stores, customers line up all day for whatever tawdry merchandise or wormy apples they can get; but in enterprises where supply and demand is permitted, the good meat sells for $15 per kilo — one-tenth the average worker's monthly wage.

The resentment is palpable; the Soviet citizen seethes inside when told his rubles are no good at a domestic airport snack bar.

People have lost faith in the value of their currency, which is another way of saying they have no faith in the way society is organized.

Item: The jewelry store in Leningrad that once was the House of Faberge is cleaned out of merchandise, especially anything with gold — not from thievery, but from a run on jewelry by customers eager to hoard anything tangible and portable.

Item: Almost every taxi driver is a black market money-changer on the side. At the official rate, a Westerner has to pay almost $2 for one ruble; on the black market, the $2 buys 20 rubles in Leningrad, 30 in Riga. Tourists often are duped with Yugoslav dinars, but the real victim of black-marketing is the Soviet consumer.

As the government, to allay unrest at home, turns toward the West to buy consumer goods, the potential for corruption escalates; Communist officials have become the middlemen in the burgeoning East-West trade.

The profit on the product and material allocation is compounded by the vigorish on the black-market currency rates; we're talking billions here in hard currency for the power elite and rising anger in the minds of what used to be called the masses.

The popular heroes in the Soviet Union today are a couple of prosecutors of the mafia, Telman Gdlyan and Nikolai Ivanov.

They jailed Brezhnev's son-in-law and are threatening Gorbachev's power purposes, but soon they may reach out for mafia members he put in place.

The pity is that his toe-in-the-water approach, his failure to take the plunge into capitalism on an equal basis, has given free enterprise a bad name; now the co-ops are being cut back.

The genius of capitalism, Western-style, is in the way government levels the field of competition, making it possible for natural greed to drive the engine of economic and social progress.

The venality of capitalism perestroika-style is that it joins political and economic power to gouge the public.

Letters

Orem's research valuable

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Ms. Celeste Reid's letter of Oct. 5 in The University Daily. In her article she proposes through authorities (a medical doctor and a veterinarian) to document that Dr. (John) Orem's research is not critical to the ultimate solution of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS). Just because somebody has a title in front of their name does not qualify them to comment on areas outside of their trained area of expertise. Typically, physicians and veterinarians who practice medicine in their respective areas receive essentially no training in scientific research and almost never contribute to the production of new knowledge (as documented by publications) critical to new medical solutions. The world of scientific investigation is very removed from that of the practicing pediatrician.

There are three major areas that are generally used as indicators of the productivity and significance of a scientist's research: First, quality and quantity of scientific publications. Second, the ability to compete for research dollars in today's highly competitive arena. Third, how often and where their research is cited. How does Dr. Orem's record stand up against such an examination? Since 1980, Dr. Orem has published (counting articles in press) 23 papers, involving such prestigious journals as The Journal of Neurophysiology, Brain Research, Respiration Physiology and Journal of Applied Physiology. Funding for his research has been entirely through the National Institute of Health — Division of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute. Finally, his publications have been cited 402 times since 1980. His work has been cited in many prestigious journals such as the Journal of Pediatrics.

If you take Dr. Orem's record and compare it to other people who are considered by the scientific community to be extremely critical and valuable to the production of new knowledge, you will find Orem's record to be outstanding and competitive. On the other hand, PETA has listed 16 people that they indicate are authorities on sleep disorders, who they say are qualified to evaluate Dr. Orem's research. Based on the Citation Index and other means of determining productivity in scientific journals, all but one or two of these 16 authorities have never been cited and have never published in journals covered by Current Contents. (The others have been cited only a couple of times). There is no indication that the authorities used by Ms. Celeste Reid and PETA have contributed to the scientific literature relative to Orem's research area.

PETA, ALF and individuals such as Celeste Reid have forced the issue of value of scientific research to a public opinion battleground. Before one makes up his mind about the potential value of Dr. Orem's research, they should know about the accepted indicators of research productivity.

Tech should be pleased to have Dr. Orem, and I hope the general public appreciates the fact that scientists who do research on animals are committed to the discovery of new knowledge and these scientists believe that the new knowledge is the key to reducing the amount of suffering in such diseases as Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, heart disease, diabetes and AIDS as well as the solution to other problems facing humans.

As a group, these scientists agree that during such studies animals should be treated as humanely as possible. These scientists differ from PETA in that they believe that it would be unethical not to try to solve these problems. We acknowledge that people have a valid right to differences in opinion. We don't agree that misrepresentation and unlawful destruction of university equipment and experiments should be tolerated. Robert J. Baker
Horn professor of biological sciences

Tech food tastes great

To the editor:

Concerning the palatal problems of local philistine-in-residence Michael Archer, I have some very simple advice, nea solutions to his dilemma:

One, go to practically any other school in the Southwest, eat to your heart's content and stay there. The food you will find, though certainly quite adequate, will also be found to be otherwise incomparable to that provided here at Texas Tech, both in quality and service. The fact is, Michael, after all whiners have come and gone, food here remains excellent.

Two, take an active role in the student-initiated menu committee if you're unsatisfied with the food here. More than just griping, as you do, they achieve results, real results, in modifying almost anything concerned with the dining services at this school. Their responsiveness to student opinion has been continually proven time and again. You would be hard-pressed to find another school that can boast of this sympathetic an organization.

Three, you are not a freshman; you are certainly not bound to live on campus by any means. Do not return next year. Cook for yourself, eat at McDonald's, or go home and get your mother to cook for you.

As for me, this is my fifth year to live on campus and I am still very pleased with the food served here. But then I have had bad food before — I know the difference. I know what is good — it isn't Fruity Pebbles.

Pseudo-patriots respond

To the editor:

We as "rampant pseudo-patriots" are writing this letter in response to Chris Abel's comments on American society which appeared in the Oct. 18 issue of The University Daily.

First, concerning the flag burning statute. The law is designed to outlaw an action which not only presents itself as inciting action against our government but also to all those men and women who fought so valiantly for our country. The flag was and still is a symbol to those who fought representing the idea of American democracy.

This loyalty may be hard for us to understand because freedom has a taste for those who have fought for it that those who haven't will never understand. The burning of the United States flag is by no means an expression of free speech. Burning the flag, no matter for what reasons bleeding-heart liberals come up with, represents at its core a hate for the United States, and if this cowardly action is the only way a person can vent their feelings then they deserve to go to jail.

I'm sure that the Iranians that burned the flag during the Iranian hostage situation did not have freedom of speech in mind, they burned it because they hated the United States and the flag was an immediate symbol of the American people. Interesting parallel, isn't it? This leads directly to the second part of Chris's letter.

The "distaste" you have for American society is a joke. Just like burning the flag, if you don't have enough intestinal fortitude to do something to change society, then stop sitting around and whining. If you are also so concerned about the Vet fund, military spending and the drug problem, then do something about it.

Wes as a Marine and I as hopefully a future member of the narcotics division of the Texas Department of Public Safety or the United States Drug Enforcement Agency are trying and aspiring to do something that will make America a better place than sitting around wishing someone would do it for us.

Anti-fur protest fruitful

To the editor:

On behalf of the Animal Rights Coalition, I would like to thank The UD and KLBK-TV for their help and cooperation with ARC's efforts to raise awareness about the brutal nature of the fur industry. I would also like to express our appreciation for the unbiased nature of the KCBDD-TV news coverage when ARC members demonstrated in front of their station on Oct. 19 in protest of the fur give-away contest. In a written statement, KCBDD-TV management promised to take ARC's concerns into consideration when determining next year's prize. Thanks also to all those in the campus community who participated by signing petitions and postcards of protest to KCBDD-TV and by joining in our demonstration, helping to make our 1989 anti-fur campaign a success.

International affairs office offers students chance to study abroad at low cost

By AMY LAWSON
The University Daily

Students interested in studying in a foreign country can pick up applications for a study abroad program in the Office of International Affairs.

Linda McGowan, overseas opportunity counselor, said the office offers three types of programs.

"There are three major semester or academic year programs: the London Semester, Denmark International Studies Program (DIS) and the International Student Exchange Program (ISEP), which is a reciprocal exchange program," she said.

McGowan said ISEP and DIS are new programs at Tech that were implemented at the beginning of the 1989 fall semester.

"All of these are relatively new to Texas Tech," she said. "We've been a part of the London semester for about a year now. The DIS and the ISEP, international student exchange programs, are both new as of this fall." ISEP involves almost 200 higher education institutions that exchange students from the United States with 33 countries around the world.

McGowan said ISEP reduces some of the cost for studying abroad.

"One of the great advantages of ISEP is that it greatly reduces the cost of study abroad, based on the idea of reciprocity," she said. "Students exchange places with students from other countries."

She said students pay tuition and fees as on-campus students and receive credit for the payment at the host institution.

McGowan said the DIS program offers students undergraduate courses in architecture and design, liberal arts and international business. The DIS program is located in Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark.

The program requires a minimum 2.5 GPA, and students fulfill prerequisites for other courses at Tech.

The London Program offers students a chance to live and study in London at a cost less than most other programs in London, McGowan said.

She said students should be classified as sophomores, juniors or seniors with a 2.5 GPA and must have completed six hours of English.

"It's one of the easiest programs to go on," McGowan said. "That is not to say it's an easy program; it's just easy to go on. Basically the student just has to decide they are going to go, turn in the application, and if they meet those criteria, then there is not any review for acceptance."

McGowan said the international affairs office also keeps catalogs of other study abroad programs offered. She said courses are offered by some language departments on campus.

Students interested in a study abroad program should go by 242 West Hall or call 742-3667.

SWC coaches sound off over crowd noise effects

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Decibel levels don't normally come up when two football coaches are talking about an upcoming game. But, then again, Houston is not the norm.

The Cougars often go without a huddle and throw about 65 passes a game.

And, the noise bothered the Cougars some in their only loss of the year —

17-13 to Texas A&M. Early in the week, Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield cited the Aggies' crowd.

"One big factor in the game is the home crowd cheering the whole game," he said. "The players are going to do all they can. I want to encourage all the fans to be prepared to do their part to help us whip Houston. Don't stand and watch. Get ready to help every way you can."

Houston Coach Jack Pardee was asked if he thought Hatfield's plea was one of desperation.

"I consider that part of the home field advantage," Pardee said Wednesday during a telephone news conference. "It's really good for a college crowd, it affected us at College Station, no doubt about it. We can probably operate our offense in a loud stadium as well as anyone. Having a big crowd, a vocal crowd, shoot, our guys all think they're hollering for them.

"It's an advantage for them, sure. It was at College Station. If the officials don't step in and make them use timeouts, that type of thing, there's nothing we can do about it.

"You can get so overwhelmed worrying about noise, that it takes away from your game. We're not going to let that happen."

Tech awards radio rights to Clear Channel

Texas Tech officials announced Tuesday that the school has awarded its radio rights for football and basketball for a five-year period starting in 1990 to Clear Channel Sports of San Antonio.

Tech's title hopes dashed with conference loss to UT

The Texas volleyball program had little trouble attaining its 500th victory Wednesday night as the 10th-ranked Longhorns swept Texas Tech 15-9, 15-1, 15-5.

Texas was led by Janine Gremmel with 14 kills and freshman Erica Hibben with 11 kills. The first-place Longhorns moved to 17-6 for the year and 6-0 in the Southwest Conference, while the Red Raiders dropped to 13-9 and 4-2. Kim Gosselin led Tech with eight kills, hitting .208. Vicki Baldwin and Sabrina Zenon each had five kills for the Raiders. As a team, Tech hit .126.

"It was probably the worst match we've played all year," Raider coach Mike Jones said. "Texas came out ready to play, and before I know it, we're down 10-1 in that first game."

"Right now we are not even close to them (Texas) in terms of quality of play."

"The complete list of International Dining Tour Winners!"
Don't miss it!

Take a trip around the world today. Show your passport tomorrow.

If you haven't completed your international dining tour of the campus restaurants, it's time to check your itinerary. Passport entries are due October 27, 1989. Get your Passport to Campus Dining stamped in all eleven campus restaurants, and you'll have the chance to win airline tickets for two, Kingsgate Kash, a VCR, computer software, or a Wilson tennis racquet. Meanwhile, everyone wins by enjoying the international flavors of the campus restaurants. It's like taking a trip around the world. No purchase needed to win. For details, see your Passport to Campus Dining, or come by the I.D./Tech Express Office in Doak Hall, Room 123.
