Lubbockites rally for American troops in Iraq

By LAURA O'QUINN The University Daily

People came to the Lubbock County Courthouse Saturday morning with flags, posters and yellow ribbons in hand to show their support for soldiers in the Persian Gulf War and to express their appreciation to their families and friends in combat.

Bridget Taylor, who has family in the Middle East, organized the rally and passed out 275 fliers at South Plains Mall on Friday night, she said. About 50 adults and children gathered on the front lawn of courthouse for the rally.

"I wanted to organize the rally to show our love and support for those in the Middle East," Taylor said. "I also wanted to counter the other protests and show that we do support the soldiers."

As songs of support played, families talked to one another, offering words of comfort and sympathy. Many of the supporters wore buttons with pictures of their friends or family members on their shirts. One man wore an American flag as a cape as he waved another

"The president is doing his job and I support him," said Delpha Moore, mother of soldiers in the Middle East.

A small boy carried a poster that read, "USA - support it or leave it. United we stand — divided we fall. Protesters get out!"

Judy Drury, a mother whose son is on the front lines, said she has not spoken with him since Dec. 27. However, she has received one letter from him since then.

"My heart wants him home, but my head knows he needs to be there," Drury said. "America needs to stop Saddam and this seems to be the only way possible."

By JULIE COLLINS The University Daily

U.S. flags and pro-soldier signs fluttered in the breeze as more than 500 supporters for the U.S. troops in the Middle East marched along South Loop 289 between Slide Road and Quaker Ave. Saturday.

Kathy Rowell, who has eight family members in the military, organized the peace rally at LeRoy Ellmore Park in hopes of uniting Lubbockites in support of the U.S. servicemen and women overseas. Rowell said that although none of her relatives are currently stationed in the gulf, it is only a matter of time before they receive their orders.

"I want my family to know and see the support I have for each of them. That is what the peace rally is all about," Rowell said.

J.T. Washington, a senior master sergeant at Reese Air Force Base, showed support for the Bush administration's show of force in the gulf. The war is about freedom and supporting neighbors in trouble, regardless of who the neighbors are, he said.

"The U.S. has chosen to be the ally to the countries that can not protect themselves against aggression," Washington said. "We will make Saddam Hussein wish he had never heard of the United States."

Washington said that individuals who protest the war march only for personal recognition.

Peace demonstrator Bruce Barker, Army specialist fourth class, left for the Middle East Sunday. He said it felt great to be in the pulse of Lubbock's support for the U.S. troops in the Middle East.

"Every soldier, including myself, is over there fighting for freedom," Barker said.

Echoes in Lubbock unnatural

Francisco Rodriguez Managing Editor

Have you ever heard an echo in the plains?

Surely not; the laws of nature require some form of blocking of soundwaves, which means you need a canyon or a mountain to bounce the sound around.

I've been witness to the rule, and, surprisingly enough, to the exception as well.

OK, go downtown and climb the First National Bank building. Yell at the top of your lungs "SADDAM HUSSEIN!!'

Wait a while.

Do you hear it? Here it comes...

"Nununununununu..." Yell louder.

"SADDAM HUSSEIN!"

"Nunununununuke him!" Sad but true.

And I must admit, the man is insane. I could understand him telling his people that they are winning the war as part of any good war propaganda campaign, but somewhere along the line he's begun to believe it himself.

Our propaganda is a little bit more believable, methinks.

I'd walk 20,000 miles to smoke a Camel.

"That Saddam is going to fuck up the environment," I hear someone say. "Pouring all that oil into the sea. Man, it's going to take a long time to clean up that mess."

"So what do you think we should do?" I ask him.

"Drop the bomb on the sumbitch."

The bomb. The bomb. The kind that releases the kind of radiation with a half-life of about - uh, at least more than 10 years.

An optimistic estimate, since we've all heard how long that wacky Uranium really lasts.

Well, at least we have some rational people running the war. President Bush assured us of that. "This will not be another Vietnam. I have said this before and I repeat (it), our troops will not be asked to fight with one cruelty, "No." hand behind their back," he said right after war broke out.

And even as many people pray for — and thereby to satisfy Saddam Husthe war to end so their loved ones return home safely, many still ask for his rape of Kuwait to the Arab war that quick solution, "Nuke 'em."

That's real smart. He fucks up the Persian Gulf, so we'll just fuck up the for now, while the dictator lusts for entire Middle East.

The grim reality is that even if Bob Dylan got a tummy tuck and a tan, nothing he would do or say - short of shooting government officials would stop the war.

Is that all there is to it? Do nothing?

No. War sucks. During these trying times of mysterious echoes in plains, we must be very careful, however. Remember what the important thing is: War kills people, soldiers are people, soldiers get killed.

They've no choice in their chosen profession. Let's support them and forget about nuking anyone.

If nuclear bombs were the answer then the United States would have answered militarily to the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan back in 1979.

I can't see George Bush asking the Barcelona Olympic Committee to not allow the Iraqi team in the 1992 Olympics.

Even if war is wrong, it is the most viable alternative - once it has started.

And I'm sure one day we'll find out what the cause behind Desert Storm was. And what the echoes meant.

TV war not what expected

Anna Quindlen Columnist

If anyone had looked inside the meeting room, they would have seen a peculiar sight. More than a hundred people had paid to hear a lecture, but the speaker had stepped aside because of circumstances and instead the audience was staring at a kind of Frankenstein monster, a figure with a brown podium for a body and a small television for a head. Suddenly the head had a face, the face of George Bush, telling the nation it had gone to war.

We had always expected it to be the television war, and that is what it has been. Tom and Dan and Peter and the pleasant generic news readers of Cable News Network stared into our eyes day after day, night after night. No one could bear to turn them off.

But it is not the television war we expected. There has been precious little to see in these first few days: magnificent planes, the occasional soldier, a few minutes of footage of what looked like a fireworks display shot in bad light.

And the talking heads: this has been a great windfall for retired generals. Once we learned that war had actually begun and Israel had been hit, there was little to discover except that Peter Jennings looks sleep.

It was not because of the press of news that we seemed incapable of turning the TV off. The television had become a kind of modern communal meeting place from which to absorb history aborning. It was America's back fence, the one place in this time of dislocation where we were all connected, all having the same sensation at the same time, even if the sensation was shame at thinking that a correspondent in a gas mask looked like a mutant bug.

The television war, they called Vietnam, and it was because it taught us what it really looked like, what happens before the clutch of soldiers hoists the flag to the top of the hill. It made all the ugly stuff real, the brutality and the blood. Red is the color of war. Jennings recalled the other day that General Westmoreland once complained in those days that the television camera saw such a narrow view. But it was wide enough.

The television hasn't had a view for these last few days; in truth, television has acted like radio, with still photographs of faces superimposed on maps. But action was not all we were looking for. Sitting in front of the television was the closest we could come to compartmentalizing the sea change.

my childhood is of the time much like this one, those long November days of watching the Kennedy murder, mourning and burial, in the blackest blacks and whitest whites I have ever known. Before this, that was the most continuous television I have ever watched. Like this, it did not provide much news. It gave you a feeling of America in a circle.

What Americans have seen these fresh as a daisy on a few hours last few days is what they had hoped and prayed for: war without tears. The explanations of how this missile was picking off that one sounded like a grand video game of the sky. Fighting raged for three Everyone hoped that was because things were going well, whatever that means. Or perhaps it is because no one really knows exactly how things are going. Reporters are far away from the front, reporting from hotel rooms with sealed windows or basements where they crouch for safety's sake. The Department of Defense is taking pool reporters where it wants them to go, which is nowhere much.

So for now, we are eased into the unspeakable, confronting the concept of combat well before we confront its realities, and incremental process that can only benefit those who believe this is a noble endeavor. We see map war, diagram war, computer war.

The closest anyone got to something else was CNN, which has given new meaning to the term "intelligence work." For half a day it had three reporters in a Bagdhad hotel room describing bombs bursting in air. But the Iraqis cut off their communications, perhaps The most enduring memory of because Dick Cheney said at a television briefing that he was getting information from CNN. A television war, indeed.

Japanese support for gulf war purely financial

By CHARLES POLLET The University Daily

Memories of the atomic bomb dropped on Japan during World War II have caused Japan to adopt a passive military stance about international conflicts, said a Japanese Texas Tech electrical engineering professor.

Japanese support for the allied coalition in the Persian Gulf War comes only in the form of financial aid. Before actual fighting began, Japan hesitated to help finance the allies for fear of funding military weapons, Ozamu Ishihara said. But when combat started, Japan could not feasibly limit how funds would be used.

'(Japanese people) were hesitating to support the concept of war itself. They were afraid that the money will be used for bombs," the professor said. "Now people feel there shouldn't be any restriction on what the money is used for. There is no time to discuss how to use the money anymore."

After World War II the United States imposed legislation on Japan that disallowed military forces, except for defense purposes. The Japanese have embraced the doctrine since, he said.

"The Japanese constitution says

Japan cannot participate in war and that constitution is wellaccepted by the people," Ishihara said. "Those concepts of not using force in international problems have become greatly accepted by the people. The people don't want war anymore, and that kind of strong feeling will continue."

The Japanese will relate personal stories of World War II to maintain the passivism in future generations, he said.

Book features Raider's recipes

By LYDIA GUAJARDO The University Daily

Have you always wondered what is that special recipe for extra spicy chili? Or what about that just-right appetizer for the dinner party where you want to make a perfect first impression?

Well, never fear, your cooking prayers have been answered. "Raider Recipes," is currently being compiled and will soon be released to help create the perfect meal.

Dawn and David Fleming are putting together a recipe book compiled of recipes from Texas Tech ex-students, faculty and current students.

"This is the first time that we are doing this, and I hope it is not the last," Mr. Fleming said. "We hope to put out an addition every one to two years."

The recipe book contains recipes from people who have either been employed by or attended Tech. The Flemings are attempting to collect at least one recipe from each graduating class.

"So far we have recipes from every class from 1927 through 1950, and we hope to get one from every class," Mr. Fleming said. "We hope to get anywhere from 400 to 600 recipes."

Other recipes have been collected from such well-known Red Raiders as President Robert Lawless, former Governor Preston Smith, Regent Alan White and the captain of Tech's first football team (1925), Winfield Nicklaus.

For anyone interested in contributing a favorite recipe, call David Fleming at 793-3330, or mail it to "Raider Recipes", 2701 53rd Street, Lubbock, Texas 79413. Along with the recipe, include the year of your Tech graduation or attendance and your degree of study or faculty/staff position.

In addition to recipes, the book will contain information about the school, various graduating classes and odd characteristics of the different academic buildings. Mr.

Fleming said he found many of the tidbits in the Southwest Collection on campus.

Thus far, the Flemings have collected well over their goal of recipes and continue to receive more.

"We have targeted some of the people we have received recipes from. Others have just found out by word-of-mouth and sent in recipes,' Mr. Fleming said.

The recipe book was started in fall of 1990 and its projected finish date is this spring. Many of the bookstores and other stores specializing in Tech paraphernalia will sell the recipe book.

"The book will be pretty much sold everywhere and all over Lubbock," Mr. Fleming said.

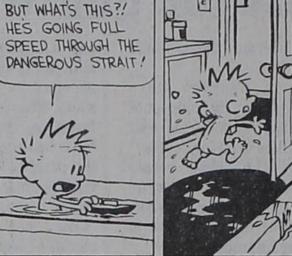

A portion of all the profits will go to the Tech Ex-Students Association in the form of a scholarship.

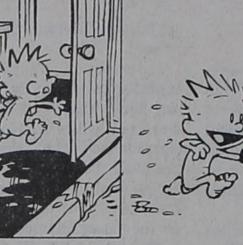

"We hope to have a large scholarship from the profits we hope to make," Mr. Fleming said.

The book will be printed on Tech campus.

Tech runs by Lady Mustangs 90-76 Bench scoring helps Raiders improve to 16-4

By MIKE PENDER The University Daily

Texas Tech women's basketball coach Marsha Sharp watched as her 'Young Guns' shot out to a quick 33-10 lead over Southern Methodist Saturday and continued the dominance en route to a 90-76 victory over the Mustangs in "The Bubble."

"I think it's probably the best we've run," Sharp said. "I felt like we got out and really created some great shots for ourselves at that period of time, and I wish we would be able to play with that type of intensity all of the time."

The Red Raiders went on a 13-0 run, 13 minutes and 11 seconds into the first half.

Sharp said the fast start was due to Tech's ability to force the Lady Mustangs into turnover situations, resulting in fast-break opportunities.

"We keyed that with our defense," Sharp said. "We played good defense. We got out front either off of a long rebound or off of a steal and we really got some goods things going offensively.

The Raiders forced 15 SMU turnovers, 10 of which came in the first

Tech's 50 percent shooting was fueled by junior-transfer Tami Wilson, who finished with 24 points and seven rebounds.

The Raiders never trailed in the contest and after eight minutes of the first half, the Mustangs never got closer than 10 points.

Sharp said, "When you can come out and get the lead, you have to play with some consistency so you can really feel good about the way you played for the 40 minutes.

"I think maybe with the inexperience on this team, that's the one thing that they really haven't been able to put together yet and that is consistency when they have the lead."
