Edwards calls for skeptics' support

Louisiana gov.-elect asks for benefit of doubt

by GUY COATES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Gov.-elect Edwin Edwards, who turned fear of ex-Klansman David Duke into landslide victory and an unprecedented fourth term, appealed to his skeptics Sunday for the benefit of a doubt. Duke, meanwhile, looked to a national agenda.

I hope this time people will look at me less with a jaundiced eye...

— Edwin Edwards

"I hope this time people will look at me less with a jaundiced eye and recognize from time to time I may have a good thought," said Edwards, who has become known as a womanizer and gambler deft at skating on the edge of ethics and the law.

Unofficial returns gave Edwards 61 percent of the vote in Saturday's election. Nearly 1.7 million of the state's 2.2 million registered voters went to the polls, a statewide record 78 percent turnout.

Duke, a state representative and maverick Republican, won a majority of the white vote despite his past leadership of a Ku Klux Klan group and support of Naon zism.

"The people were told they would lose jobs, lose tourism," Duke said. "They were threatened with the loss of their livelihood if they dared to vote for me."

"At the end, they weren't prepared to undergo the sacrifices they'd have had to make or thought they'd have to make."

Black leaders rejoiced at church services Sunday, as did business executives who had warned in television ads and letters to employees that a Duke election would cripple tourism, convention business and future major sporting events.

"I'm delighted when I think of what he could have done to our economy," said French Quarter antiques dealer David Dixon, who spent $45,000 for his own radio and television ads.

"But I think the way he was defeated—the big margin—we emerge as a kind of knight in shining armor around the country."

Edwards' first three terms were marked by scandals, so much so that the voters shunned him in 1987, giving the job to Buddy Roemer. But Roemer finished third in the Oct. 19 open primary.

Telephone harassment problem at Texas Tech

by JENNIFER SANDER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Telephone harassment is a problem at Texas Tech, but can be easily remedied if a person handles the calls correctly, said Gene Minnick of the University Police Department.

He said UPD receives many reports of harassing phone calls, especially in the residence halls. He said there are normally more reports at the end of each semester than during the year. UPD usually writes at least one telephone harassment report a week.

Minnick said that once the complaint is made, an officer investigates the call. He said that most people who place a tap on their phone will locate the caller. He said 60 to 70 percent are usually identified.

Harassment can be defined as the communication by telephone or writing that makes a comment, request, or suggestion of proposal that is obscene. The comment is considered threatening if it alarms the person because of threats of serious bodily injury, or if the caller commits a felony against the victim, a member of his or her family or property.

A harassing phone call may also involve a false report of another person suffering death or serious bodily injury. A telephone ringing repeatedly, anonymous calls or calls made with the intent to harass, annoy, alarm, abuse, torment, embarrass or offend another are considered harassment.

A person who makes a telephone call and intentionally fails to hang up or disengage the connection or knowingly permits a telephone under his control to be used by a person to commit any offense can be charged for phone harassment.

"The most common is when a person hangs up or says something insulting," Minnick said. "The next are calls that are sexually oriented when the caller calls for sexual gratification. The other are those that are threatening. These are the ones when you feel like you may be in danger. We don't see many of these, but there have been a few."

Minnick said that most of the time, the reports are valid and people have their suspicions of who is making the call, which usually are correct.

"I don't know the exact statistics for other campuses when it comes to telephone harassment, but I think it is a typical problem on most college campuses," Minnick said.

The most common is when a person hangs up or says something insulting.

— Gene Minnick

Phone harassment is a Class B misdemeanor. A person can receive a fine not to exceed $1,500, confinement in jail not to exceed 180 days, or both.

Minnick said a tap, or tracer, can be put on a person's telephone, however, the individual must keep an accurate log of all calls with the exact date and time. Minnick said that accuracy is important in making a proper identification.

The telephone company has a print-out of all calls, incoming and outgoing which can be matched to the victim's log.

UPD is putting together a brochure that gives students tips about handling prank phone calls. It should be available next semester in all residence halls and the UPD. Minnick said the brochure will give advice for several different phone harassment situations.

Raiders rain on Baylor's parade, 31-24

by LEN HAYWARD
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

WACO — On a cool, rainy Saturday afternoon in Waco, two teams met for a game which to many did not mean much, but to the two teams competing, the game was a source of pride.

The Texas Tech football team entered the game against the Baylor Bears with a record of 4-5 and on the heels of a hot streak — winning three of their last four games. The Red Raiders had not won in Waco since 1983 and always have had problems with the Bears, both in Waco and in Lubbock.

The Raiders were looking to continue that streak, but the Bears thought otherwise as they were expecting a bowl bid in the midst of their best season in five years. They entered the game at 7-2, still looking for a way to slip into the Cotton Bowl.

But, when the rain stopped and Floyd Casey Stadium began to clear, the scoreboard read Tech 31 — Baylor 24, giving the Raiders their fourth win in five games. Tech evened its record at 5-5 (4-3 in the SWC), while the Bears fell to 7-3 (4-3) on the season.

Baylor dominated the game statistically, but had five turnovers — three fumbles and two interceptions.

"I thought we played real good," Tech coach Spike Dykes said after the game. "It wasn't real pretty, but we played hard all the way through. We got down early but we battled back."

The Raiders earned the margin of victory on what football coaches call a 14-point play, when senior strong safety Brian Dubiski hit Baylor tailback Craig Stephens just outside of the end zone, knocking the ball loose. Sophomore cornerback Donny Brooks found the ball in his hands and trotted 99 yards for the touchdown with 12:05 left to play in the game.

"I have an outside responsibility, and (Brian) Dubiski got his helmet on the football," Brooks said. "It surprised me to find the ball right there. It just seemed to pop into my hands, and once I got it, the rest was easy."

Tech, LISD sponsor physical education program for students with disabilities

by CATHERINE DUNN
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Students with disabilities now have the chance to be more than sports spectators through an adapted physical education program co-sponsored by Texas Tech's department of health, physical education and recreation and the Lubbock Independent School District.

The program, designed for students in kindergarten through age 21, was organized by Debra Devenport, director of special education for LISD, and Robert Weber, an assistant professor and Tech coordinator of adapted physical education.

The program, which is conducted at 30 LISD schools, targets students who have a variety of medical problems or who are classified as mentally handicapped, learning or physically disabled or emotionally/behaviorally disabled, Devenport said.

It is a direct service similar to physical therapy, occupational therapy or therapeutic recreation. However, those services cannot substitute for adapted physical education, she said.

Each year five Tech graduate student receives an LISD grant to provide 20 hours per week of adapted physical education options at six Lubbock schools, Weber said. The students are assisted by about 50 undergraduate physical education majors each semester.

The program has been so well accepted that LISD may offer another grant in the coming year, he said.

"This program benefits students in both LISD and Texas Tech," Devenport said. "The district is providing hands-on training for the Texas Tech student as well as securing qualified instructors to fill future positions."

Weber said there are virtually no qualified adaptive physical education specialists in the western half of Texas. A 1989 survey found there were only four specialists west of Wichita Falls, he said.

The program, which began in 1989, has added a few more specialists to the work force, but the numbers are still low, he said. Texas Women's University is the only other school in Texas which offers a similar program.

The program offers students a chance to develop skills in sports such as basketball, gymnastics, powerlifting, swimming and dance, Weber said. It is also designed to enable students to work at their ability level.

"If there are limitations, we try to work out a way to overcome those limitations," he said.

For instance, if a student who wants to play tennis is in a wheelchair, the ball is allowed to bounce twice instead of just once. Rules and equipment are modified or special equipment is used to adjust to the special needs of the disabled students, Weber said.

Because the needs of the disabled are not normal, there has to be instructions that meet their unique needs, said

Weather
Today's forecast calls for sunny skies (it's about time) with a high in the lower 70s. Winds will be a-blowin' so hold on to your hat. They will be out of the west at 20-30 mph and very, very gusty. A lake-wind advisory will also be in effect. Tonight calls for mostly clear skies, with a low in the mid 30s.

Correction

In Friday's features section of The University Daily, The UD erroneously reported that Jimmie Vaughan was the lead guitarist for the band The Fabulous Thunderbirds. Vaughan is no longer with the band, choosing to pursue other musical paths. The UD regrets the error.

Magic mail

Believe in Magic

It has been a little over a week since the world was riveted by the news of "Magic" Johnson's acquirement of the HIV virus and his subsequent retirement from professional basketball.

It terribly pains us to hear and read such negative things about Mr. Johnson's situation, while he is taking advantage of the time he has left to work and educate the public.

God simply could not have chosen a more prominent, respected spokesman for the disease. Perhaps this is the only way to conquer it! Since the announcement last Thursday, there has been an utter explosion of new awareness and concern about the disease like never before.

The National AIDS Hotline recorded approximately 40,000 phone calls on the day of Johnson's announcement, instead of the usual 3,800.

At the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, AIDS-related calls jumped from an average of 200 per hour to 10,000 in a single hour on the eve of the announcement!

Although "Magic" has millions of dollars and doesn't have to work another day in his life, he has accepted his situation and promised to crusade for the cause. This deserves respect in itself.

Consequently, Mr. Johnson doesn't need anyone's pity and certainly not the criticism.

That just stands in the way of the fight. What "Magic" needs more than anything is your prayers and your help. He needs everyone to join his "new" team in educating the public and beating this disease.

The bottom line is: "Magic" is a real hero. One who uses his influential persona for the good of society and promises to work to teach the public and save numerous lives can be called nothing short of "hero."

For these reasons and so much more, we should all have faith and believe in "Magic."

Steven Garcia
Chris Weige

Magic still a hero

Having read Mr Hyatt's column in the Nov. 13 issue of The UD, I feel compelled to respond.

Everyone in the media who has "revered" Mr. Johnson understands that Mr. Johnson became infected with AIDS through the tragic mistake of not engaging in the practices of safe sex, as he himself admits.

Rather than spending his time blaming the victims of AIDS for their own suffering, Mr. Hyatt would do well to question a society that won't run ads for condoms on television for fear of "offending" someone, while at the same time depicting the most grotesque acts of violence on a regular basis.

Mr. Hyatt also provides more than just a hint that he dislikes Mr. Johnson because he is wealthy as a result of having been a talented basketball player. I'm sorry to have to tell him that when capitalism is properly functioning, those who are most valued for their talents tend to get wealthy.

Whether society defines a person as a hero depends on what the person does with their life. Mr. Johnson could use his money to go on a long, relaxing vacation, which would probably be the healthiest thing for him to do in his current, weakened condition.

The most offensive part of the article is contained within the final few paragraphs, in which Mr. Hyatt exploits the tragic story of Miss Harris, the woman who died of cystic fibrosis, by juxtaposing the amount of newsprint devoted to her death with the amount given to Mr. Johnson's story and thereby implies that this reflects something bad about the American public.

Certainly, anyone like Miss Harris is a hero and deserves respect. But this does not mean that Mr. Johnson, who is coping with AIDS and at the same time raising money for important charities, is not also a hero in his own right.

Mailbag

Who died and left you boss?

I don't appreciate Mr. Scott R. Ammer's comments in The UD [letters] dated Nov. 15. Mr. Ammer seems to feel that he needed to satiate some frivolous, and self-indulgent desire to see his inane opinion in ink.

I'm sure it's a real treat for him to see the fruits of his labor so wasted on such an easily refuted issue.

Mr. Ammer has no right to say that he represents all the fraternities here at Tech. He certainly does not represent the opinion of my fraternity. I am a Sigma Chi here at Tech and I am also the commander of the drill team that was responsible for the 24-hour guard at the POW/MIA vigil.

Mr. Ammer is just another one of these irate liberals whining that life's not fair.

He has no clue to the issue. The ROTC teaches discipline and physical fitness. This is a far cry from the purpose and practice of a fraternity. I don't know about the Sigma Nu's, which Mr. Ammer is a member, but at Sigma Chi we teach brotherhood, responsibility, and leading your life by example.

In the corps I teach my troops discipline, respect for authority, and keeping a strong mind and a strong body.

All the physical activity I put on my people is strictly voluntary. These men and women are motivated by their ultimate goal to be the best that they can be. We do not participate in or condone any acts that can be construed as hazing. We are constantly under the watchful eye of Air Force officials to insure we don't overstep our bounds.

As far as Mr. Ammer referring to the ROTC cadets as "boys" consider this, the corps of cadets is made up of men and women, not "boys." This obviously shows Mr. Ammer hasn't reached the '90s yet. The uniform of the "pledges" that Mr. Ammer is referring to is strictly to implement standardization among the cadets, another lesson of the military and not a fraternity.

As a suggestion to Mr. Ammer, I think he should transfer to A&M. I think he would enjoy himself there, the corps love his kind.

Mr. Ammer, consider this, next time you wish to expose something so scandalous, you should listen to reason. If the ROTC cadets succumb to this so called "hazing", why do they do it under the scrutiny of the public eye in the middle of memorial circle? Come on Mr. Ammer, try thinking before you write.

Jim Booker

Get it straight

I feel I speak for all military personnel on campus, ROTC, active, and reserve, when I say that Mr. Ammer's Nov. 15 letter to the editor was absurd. Since when is physical exercise considered hazing? My understanding is that hazing is something done solely to pledges and new recruits. PT, or Physical Training, is required of all military personnel. The purpose of hazing is to demean and demoralize individuals. The purpose of PT is two-fold.

First, a weekly regime of physical activity strengthens the body and prepares the individual to meet many of the demands that may be placed upon him or her in the military. Second, PT is used as a way to install discipline, something essential in military life. What Mr. Ammer fails to understand is that the ROTC program is not a club. Rather, it is an extension of the military. Why do cadets wear white T-shirts during PT? The answer is simple, it is part of the uniform. I am surprised that, as Mr. Ammer asserts, the entire Greek system is baffled by the alleged double-standard that exists here at Tech. ROTC is not a fraternity and it is not an organization. It produces over 80 percent of our nation's officers. It is a proven method of developing intelligent, well-rounded leaders. Next time you are walking around Tech and notice a formation of cadets performing PT, rather than complain of a double-standard, how about taking a brief moment to encourage them?

William H. Curnow

Get a clue

I would like to respond to the letter in the Friday, Nov. 15, University Daily regarding the AFROTC POW/MIA Vigil held in Memorial Circle over the weekend of Nov. 8 submitted by Scott R. Ammer.

Let me first say that I am a Greek as well as a member of AFROTC. I was not informed that the entire Greek system was voting to elect a spokesman. Further, I do not believe that if the IFC were to put forward a spokesman, they would have selected someone as uninformed as yourself. Finally, let me say that you do not speak for me.

Please realize that the men doing the push-ups were participating in a voluntary fund-raising project of their own device. What's more, much of the "yelling and screaming" that you heard was actually done by veterans who were cheering because they were proud to see these young men honoring their missing comrades in arms.

Those men did two push-ups for every American soldier who is still MIA. This information was broadcast on the Radio and T.V. news as well as right here in this paper! I want to make it clear that these young men were not being forced to do any push-ups.

I need to make another point. AFROTC is not composed of "boys." There are a considerable number of female cadets in the Corps as well as young men. I want you to think about the definition of "boy," then do something for me.

The next time you meet with a private sector recruiter, I would like you to ask him if he would rather hire a hot head Greek that shoots off his mouth (or pen as the case may be) before he has accumulated any, much less all of the facts, or would he rather hire a student who has completed the AFROTC officership training program, who may also be a fraternity or sorority member.

I believe you will find that AFROTC graduates are much more attractive than the average student due to their level of responsibility and maturity.

Why are you so concerned about what the AFROTC drill team chooses to wear as their uniform? One of the goals of the ROTC is to teach standardization. Do you think that all military officers should refuse to wear a standard uniform? What about the police? How could you tell who they were when they came to arrest you for serving alcohol to minors at your house? Realize that the military relies heavily on standardization to keep things running smoothly. It is necessary that things be the same at different locations due to the frequent personnel shifts. It is imperative that cadets learn this concept in order to become effective officers. If you can show that making all pledges wear white T-shirts will make them better Lambda-Lambda-Lambda's, then I'm sure you can include it in your training program without worrying about violating any hazing codes.

Mr. Ammer, in the future, please get a grasp on the facts before you put pen to paper, and don't claim to speak for people and organizations that you do not really represent.

Robert C. Nash

He should know

I am writing this letter in response to Mr. Scott R. Ammer's letter regarding the events conducted in Memorial Circle on Nov. 8. As AFROTC Cadet Corps Commander, I am the spokesman for the cadets of AFROTC, and will speak on their behalf to clarify Mr. Ammer's confusion.

Mr. Ammer made reference to what was the 9th Annual POW/MIA Vigil held in Memorial Circle. The event began at noon on Nov. 8 and lasted 24 hours. The vigil was sponsored by Arnold Air Society, Sabre Flight Drill Team, and Angel Flight, all are organizations affiliated with AFROTC. Obviously, the vigil was held in remembrance of those men and women who fought and gave their lives for this country, and who indirectly allowed for Mr. Ammer's letter, and this one, to be freely published.

I believe that the purpose of Mr. Ammer's letter was principally designed to stir-up the issue of hazing here at Tech. This is his right, however accusing AFROTC of this offense is entirely out of order. We are fully aware of reference to an individual telling three young men in white T-shirts to sound off as they completed a number of push-ups. To clarify, the three young men were members of Arnold Air Society who volunteered to do two push-ups for every American not accounted for from the conflict in Southeast Asia. The white T-shirts were their choice and are part of the uniform. Mr. Ammer must not have passed by when several veterans joined in the exercise, and while whose confined to wheelchairs cheered them on. The cadets completed 3,107 push-ups, their tribute to over 2,300 Americans.

In addition, I want Mr. Ammer to understand that the event was cleared through the university in advance and that Dr. Lawless was invited to attend but had to cancel due to previous commitments.

I hope I was able to clear up any confusion from Mr. Ammer's letter. However, I will be one of the commissioned officers that this university and its ROTC programs will have produced come December, and do not appreciate the reference to "boy".

Med students take year off to practice bio-medical research

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

In recent years, professionals in the academic arena have expressed the need for more research scientists in the United States. For this reason, the American Heart Association sponsors a fellowship for medical school students that allows them to take a year off from medical school to do bio-medical research.

Dr. Lorenz Lutherer, a professor in the departments of physiology and internal medicine and director of the fellowship program at Tech, said the purpose of the program is to give medical students first-hand involvement in research with the idea that they may become interested in having their own active research program.

The mission of the AHA, as Lutherer calls it, is "dedication to reduction of disability and death from cardiovascular disease and stroke."

"AHA is able to achieve that mission through supporting education and research," he said.

Lutherer explained that students who participate in the program are the people who will be physicians and hopefully will support the AHA's mission in the future.

Texas Tech was awarded by AHA-national, a three-year institutional fellowship for the years 1991 through 1994 in order to sponsor two students in the university's medical school program each academic year.

The two Tech students are chosen to spend the 1991-92 academic year doing laboratory research are Richard DeBenedetto and David S. Cockrum.

Both students applied for fellowships during their second years in medical school and will resume their studies as juniors next fall.

Lutherer said the ideal time for students to apply is after their second year in medical school prior to beginning clinical work.

The fellowship is set up for a 12-month period and includes a stipend for students which means they are employed full-time in the lab.

No course credit can be earned while students are participating in the program. However, participants who successfully complete the program will graduate from medical school with research honors.

Lutherer said successful completion of the fellowship program depends on how the student's mentor and a committee evaluates the student's performance.

"Ideally, successful completion would be carrying a research project to the end and having the results published in a scholarly journal," Lutherer said.

There is a serious national need for doctors with clinical experience to do research.

— Charles Garner

However, he said students are not held accountable to that goal because there is never a guarantee in the area of research that the end result will produce anything worthwhile.

DeBenedetto and Cockrum, who began the program in July, both have plans to publish a paper concerning their research results as well as give their results in an oral presentation.

DeBenedetto and Cockrum are involved in separate laboratory experiments, however, both must be able to relate their work in some way to cardiovascular research.

DeBenedetto is researching retinal and vascular tissue response to ischemia, which is a lack of blood flow.

DeBenedetto explained that when ischemia occurs there is a release of neurotransmitters, called excitotoxins, which are responsible for damage to retinal tissues in the eye. When the toxins are released, the body releases a chemical called adenosine which tends to lessen the damage done by the toxins.

DeBenedetto and his mentor, Craig Crosson, a researcher in the department of ophthalmology with a joint appointment in the department of pharmacology, said that because the eye is the most visible part of the brain, research done involving vascular tissue in the eye is directly applicable to vascular tissue responses in the brain. The components which are responsible for the problems DeBenedetto is researching in the eye are similar to those which can lead to a stroke.

DeBenedetto and Crosson also said they felt the research DeBenedetto is doing this year will have a more immediate impact on the medical community than just benefitting the AHA and cardiovascular research.

Richard's research will have an impact on a number of blinding diseases like glaucoma and vascular degeneration," said Crosson.

"How often do you get to help people restore their vision," he said.

Cockrum is researching the aortic smooth muscle cells in rabbits and a protein found in the muscle cells.

Cockrum and his adviser Charles Garner, associate professor in the department of biochemistry and molecular biology, explained that aortic cells in a diabetic person grow faster and accumulate causing a lump to form on the heart.

Through Garner's previous research with insulin, the team has developed a hypothesis that the lump forms because of a defective insulin signaling pathway.

Garner, Crosson and DeBenedetto said they feel the program has a great deal to offer students and the area of academic medicine.

"There is serious national need for doctors with clinical experience to do research," Garner said. "I would like to see more of our students do things like this."

Fraternity outlines legalities of drug use

by JULIE COLLINS
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity is continuing the tradition set by former Phi Alpha Delta members by addressing various high schools in the Lubbock area on the legal ramifications of drug usage.

The "Drugs and the Law" program was developed by the fraternity in the early 1980s, and new fraternity members have been keeping the program alive.

The educational program attempts to educate teenagers and all who are interested on legal matters of drug possession.

The program is delivered in a seminar format dealing with state laws on the classification of drugs, penalties associated with drug usage and various criminal procedures such as search and seizure.

Gregg Timmons, president of Phi Alpha Delta, said the program helps reduce questions that adolescents may have concerning various legal principles.

Timmons said that one question frequently asked by high school students deals with the right of privacy of students once they walk into their high schools.

He said many times students are surprised to know the principal of any high school has the right to search lockers for drugs and drug paraphernalia based solely on assumption.

"Principals have the right to conduct searches through lockers without a search warrant whereas a police officer must have a search warrant in order to do the same," Timmons said.

Ross Bennett, a second year law student from San Angelo and fraternity member, said students are also interested in understanding various penalties for possession of drugs and what to expect in certain situations if drugs are discovered, he said.

In addition, Ross said students want to know what their legal rights are if for example, they go to a party where drugs are available but some individuals choose not to use them and subsequently, the police raid the party.

Timmons said an individual who is taken to the police station on suspicion of drug use can ask for a blood test to clear his or her name. Likewise, he said individuals who did not use drugs at the party should not act or look like they were involved with the drugs.

"Don't give the cops any reason to believe you have used drugs when you didn't. Don't act scared if you haven't used drugs," Timmons said.

Police officers do not have to read an individual's Miranda rights brought in for suspicion of drug use, he said.

"The Supreme Court is slowly chipping away at the Miranda rights. Cops don't necessarily read your Miranda rights to you in order to detain you for questioning," Timmons said.

Likewise, Bennett said teachers feel that the information Phi Alpha Delta is providing for their students is useful and needs to be shared with others.

Bennett said that strict enforcement of various drug laws is on the rise.

"The judicial system is in favor of increased police enforcement activities instead of letting them get off," Timmons said.

Phi Alpha Delta has a standing commitment with the Mental Health and Mental Retardation of Lubbock to give lectures to individuals within that program concerning charges for various drug offenses.

Disabled students learn physical education

"That's one reason why we're so important because we're trained to meet those unique needs," he said. "We're teaching them something that is normal and is what most people take for granted. We're teaching them life skills and communication."

Conatser, who is one of the graduate students receiving a grant from LISD, said the students in his program work harder than most of the college students in his classes.

"To see them work that hard makes me want to work harder," he said. "They fight with their whole body just to make one movement. They just are a real motivator."

Conatser said some of the skills which are taught are fitness skills, motor skills and fundamental motor skills. Fitness skills are skills such as muscle strengthening, muscular and cardiovascular endurance and flexibility.

Motor skills include agility, coordination, balance, speed and explosive power, which is found in events such as long jumping.

Fundamental motor skills include hand-eye coordination skills, axial skills, which are twisting-type skills and locomotive skills, such as crawling and walking.

"My experience so far is that once people get to know and understand the special populations, it is going to make them better citizens in our community," he said.

"(Working with the disabled) enlightened me. I'll never let them go. I'll always work with them somehow in my life."

Ann Daniels, an LISD academic adjustment teaching assistant, said the program also teaches the disabled students interaction.

Nirvana achieves paradise with latest album, 'Nevermind'

by CHAD DUERKSEN
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Commercialism has all but taken over the music world.

Now, in these days of the celluloid pop, pretentious rap, and rock-a-billy country, it is truly hard to find a band with no hang-ups, playing for the sheer value of music and not for stardom. If the band is good enough, stardom usually follows.

The alternative scene, thankfully brought to Lubbock by Texas Tech's own KTXT-FM, explores, in a slightly different way, the essence of rock 'n' roll. Bands like Jane's Addiction, Naked Raygun, and the California-based Bad Religion are leaders of the pack, along with the funk sounds of the Red Hot Chili Peppers and the neo-electric Butthole Surfers. Alternative is to the '90s as what psychedelia was to the '60s, punk to the '70s, and pop to the '80s. It is truly a unique genre, as definitive as it is original. Many bands try to be alternative; only a few remain memorable. That's why the new album from Nirvana is such a surprise.

Aptly titled "Nevermind," this new album explores a range of the senses while crisply defining the '90s culture with the title of the album. This three-man band, comprised of vocalist/guitarist Kurt Cobain, drummer David Grohl, and bassist Chris Novoselic, plays its raw-edged music to the core. Lyricist Cobain is intelligently aware of what's going on around him, weaving his off-beat lyrics with some varied beats that stand tall as social statements.

The first song, "Smells Like Teen Spirit," is already on the college radio Top 10, and may be the most wired song of the album, along with "Breed" ("I don't care/I don't mind/Get away/I'm afraid"). "Lounge Act" focuses on personal truth amidst others' lies. Verses like ("I've got this friend you see, who makes me feel/And I wanted more than I could steal/I'll arrest myself or wear a shield/I'll go out of my way to prove myself") and ("Don't tell me what I want to hear/Afraid of ever knowing fear/Experience anything you need/I'll keep fighting jealousy") focus on the alienation of today's youth to fit in, even if it means sacrificing their own personal values. And by far the best song remains "Lithium," a slower, bass guided anthem ("I'm not scared/Light my candles/In a daze 'cause I found God").

Other songs include "In Bloom" ("Sell the kids for food/Weather changes moods"), "Come As You Are," the acoustical "Polly," "Territorial Pissings," "Drain You," the pumped "Stay Away," "On A Plain" ("Love myself, better than you/I know it's wrong, what can I do?"), and "Something In The Way."

This is really the first big album for Nirvana, and it deserves attention. The members play well together, creating a tight sound that is ultimately well-mixed.

Cobain's vocals range from the subtle to the strained, as does his guitar. Novoselic's bass has almost a funk beat, kept up by equally impressive drumming by Grohl. All in all, this may be one of the very best albums released this year.

True, the band does have room to grow, and a few of the songs sound alike. But maybe Nirvana's outlook is best summed up by a verse from the hit "Smells Like Teen Spirit." ("I found it hard, it was hard to find, oh well, whatever, nevermind").

Drivel: Part 3 Kirk's wrath

KIRK BAIRD PARKS
Rocky vs Bullwinkle

If the wacky and dimwitted moose were to square-off against the zany flying squirrel, just who would win?

The law of animals would suggest the bigger-sized moose would take the little squirrel. However, this does not take into account the fleet-footed squirrel's ability to fly around the moose. Of course, the moose does have antlers to jab the squirrel. But then again, the squirrel could grab a bomb, fly above the moose and drop it on him. But there is probably no way that a squirrel could carry a bomb, but what about a grenade?

He could drop a grenade on top of the moose, but if Bullwinkle knew he was coming, he could have a missile ready to shoot Rocky down. Oh well, the world may never know.

Groovy

OK, what's the deal with the 1960s retro vocabulary coming back into focus. What is cool about saying "dig" or "groovy." Why are people wearing sideburns? A guy on a ridiculous Fox show decides that shaving is too much, so he lets that facial hair drift down the side of his face. "Hey, cool man, I'm really digging your scene, man." Please, people, be original. Let the flower power stay in the fab '60s, when hippies ruled.

Pat

OK, the Pat character was funny eight skits ago, but somehow the novelty of an androgenous character who baffles people with whether or not he/she is a he or she has just lost its charm, if it ever really had it to begin with. New skit, please, Mr. Michaels.

Texas manhandles Tech for SWC title

by LEN HAYWARD
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

AUSTIN — Before Friday night, for the first time in the history of Southwest Conference women's volleyball another team besides the Texas Lady Longhorns challenged for the conference title.

But the upset bid by Texas Tech fell short as the Lady Longhorns drubbed the Red Raiders in three games 15-3, 15-3 and 15-11.

"Texas played great," coach Mike Jones said after the match. "They never let us in the match. They served the ball hard, and every time they set the ball something happened."

With the win the Lady 'Horns won their 10th SWC volleyball championship and raised their record to 19-7, while finishing the conference season at 9-1. The Raiders' record fell to 23-5 overall and 7-2 in SWC play, assuring at least a tie for second place.

The closest Tech came to Texas was in the third game when Lady 'Horn coach Mick Haley made some substitutions that helped to give the Raiders some momentum.

Texas took a 7-0 lead, but Tech would not die as they came back to tie the score when Lady 'Horn Tanna Matthews' kill attempt went out.

The Raiders took the lead, when a Katy Jameyson kill was blocked by senior middle blocker Chris Martin making the score 8-7.

The two teams traded sideouts, with Texas getting the serve. Lady 'Horn outside hitter Annette Garza took over the serve, with Texas tying the score at 8-8 and Jameyson recording her 12th kill of the match.

Tech had a hitting percentage of .049 compared to .288 for the Lady 'Horns. Texas also had 58 kills compared to the Raiders' 25, while Tech committed 19 errors.

Carter got the call as the starting setter when junior setter Rochelle Kaaiaa was admitted to the hospital Thursday night for an emergency appendectomy.

"I just had a job to do, and I had to go out and do it," Carter said. "During the third game we started to play well, and maybe if we played that well the whole match, the outcome may have been different."

Texas then tied the score at 9-9 when senior outside hitter Janine Gremmel recorded her 14th kill of the match. The Lady 'Horns never looked back, as the game and match ended when Garza's kill attempt fell in on the Raiders side of the net.

"We did not pass very well," senior outside hitter Sabrina Zenon said. "If we cannot pass well, then we cannot set up. We just broke down, and their serving had a lot to do with it. We thought we were ready to play, and we had been excited since the last match."

The Lady 'Horns got started early in the match, as they opened up a lead of 14-2 in the first game. The game ended when Garza recorded her 10th kill of the match. Texas did virtually the same thing in game one, as the Raiders never saw a lead.

The Raiders will try to lock up second place in the conference, as they will face the Texas A&M Lady Aggies on Wednesday, the last SWC match of the season.
