Mondale leads pack in early Iowa returns

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Former Vice President Walter Mondale outpaced the field Monday night in early results from Iowa's Democratic caucuses — a keynote contest in the quest for nomination to challenge President Reagan.

The major television networks all said their projections showed Mondale an easy victor in the leadoff contest of the Democratic presidential race, a result that would validate his front-runner credentials heading into the primary elections.

With 9 percent of the 2,495 precinct caucuses reporting, Mondale had 3,457 votes or 51 percent of the total.

Mondale was the unanimous choice of politicians and pollsters to finish well ahead of the field.

Anything less would be a devastating blow to his quest for the White House.

The Democratic caucuses were expected to attract nearly 100,000 people to register their presidential preference in meetings convened in living rooms, schoolhouses and fire stations.

The balance of the vote was divided eight ways, among Mondale's seven rival candidates and the voters who preferred to remain uncommitted.

Those numbers:
Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado 891 or 13 percent.

Former Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota 658 or 10 percent.

Uncommitted 542 or 8 percent.
Sen. Alan Cranston of California 481, 7 percent.

Sen. John Glenn of Ohio 365, 5 percent.
Former Gov. Ruben Askew of Florida 246, 4 percent.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson 173, 2 percent.
Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina 11.

Hours before the Democrats gathered, Reagan campaigned in two Iowa cities against the would-be challengers he accused of thinking like dinosaurs.

He was unopposed in Republican caucuses.
Glenn, Cranston and Hart were thought to be the leading candidates for second place; McGovern and Askew also campaigned hard here and hoped for a surprise.

Hollings and Jackson spent only a few hours campaigning in Iowa.

The Democrats were alone until Reagan decided to make a caucus day visit to Waterloo and Des Moines.

Iowa was the first opportunity rank-and-file voters had to tell their preference for the Democratic nomination.

They would do it in each of the state's 2,497 precincts with a public declaration in front of friends and neighbors.

The precinct caucus process moves through county and congressional district conventions and ends at Republican and Democratic state conventions in June.

Voters in the precincts were choosing delegates to county conventions next spring.

A candidate needed at least 15 percent of the vote at a caucus to receive any delegates. People whose favorite was less could support an alternate choice or declare themselves uncommitted.

Iowa will send 58 delegates to the Democratic National Convention next July in San Francisco and 37 to the Republican convention in August in Dallas.

The first Democratic delegates were 164 House members, chosen by their colleagues. Mondale had the support of at least 70 and Glenn was second with 17.

In remarks prepared for a rally in Waterloo, Reagan labeled the Democrats "big spenders" and captives of special interest groups.

An Iowa poll published Monday in The Des Moines Register said Reagan's approval rating had dropped to 40 percent, the lowest in Iowa since he took office.

Of the 1,003 adults surveyed last week, 43 percent disapproved of Reagan's performance.

The poll also said Mondale was leading Reagan 53 to 39 in the state, while Glenn was ahead of the president by a margin of 50 to 39.

Students file for positions in Senate and SA

By DAMON PEARCE
University Daily Reporter

Four Texas Tech students have officially filed for executive positions in the Tech Student Association and the Student Senate as of late Monday afternoon.

David Fisher, who has filled the office of internal vice president this year, filed for the position of president of the Student Association.

Fisher, a junior from Midland, said his experience as president of the Senate would aid him in directing the overall efforts of the Student Association.

"I think there needs to be a continuity between administrations in the Student Association, and I can provide that," Fisher said.

"I am the most experienced and the most familiar with the job."

Fisher said he also is concerned with the upcoming legislative year in Austin.

"I think that we need to pay close attention to what is going on with the Legislature and be prepared to represent our students."

"Lubbock is so far removed from Austin, and we need to make sure that we are heard," Fisher said.

Dan Waggoner currently is president of the Student Association.

Allison Bennett, who currently is the chairman of the Senate rules and administration committee, filed Monday for the position of internal vice president.

"I have been involved with the Senate for two years now, and I know how things operate," Bennett said.

"The internal vice president has to know a lot of parliamentary procedure, and my experience on the rules and administration committee will help with this."

Bennett also indicated a desire to keep the student body involved with what the Senate is doing and aware of what is going on in the Senate.

Shelley Fischer, currently a senator from the College of Arts and Sciences, filed her application for the position of external vice president.

"I think the primary role of the external vice president is one of communication, and I have a background that should help with that," Fischer said.

"I would like for the students to be informed, and I have always been interested in this part of the Senate," she said.

Fischer said her journalism background would be very helpful, and makes her qualified for the position.

Edward Sandlin filed his intention to run for one of three at-large Senate positions.

Ross King filed his intention to run for a seat in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Student Association elections will be conducted March 7. Friday is the filing deadline.

Anyone wishing to file for a Senate position should apply in the Student Association office on the second floor of the University Center.

When filing an intention to run, potential candidates should take with them a grade report from the registrar's office.

KTXT 88-hour campout benefit nears end

By STEVE KAUFFMAN
University Daily Reporter

KTXT-FM news director Bill Pettit, who has been camping out at Memorial Circle since 2 a.m. Saturday, finally can envision the end of his 88-hour outdoor visit with the Texas Tech campus.

The project is a public relations hype for a fund-raising dance tonight to help benefit Aaron Hoffman, a 7-month-old boy in need of a liver transplant.

The Tech radio station has been on the air continuously since the beginning of the event. Pettit does remote spots for the station at 10, 20, 30 and 50 minutes after the hour, day and night.

"I'm not tired right now," Pettit said at 5 p.m. Monday while tossing a Frisbee. "I haven't been getting much sleep, but right now I just got a burst of energy."

Pettit said he slept about three hours Saturday night. Sunday night he squeezed a half hour of rest into his schedule.

"People have been coming up and hanging out all the time I've been out here," Pettit said.

He said he has never been alone in his tent since the beginning of the project. At night, members of the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity, who are co-sponsoring the event, come by and keep Pettit company.

Some students have come to see Pettit in the early hours of the morning because they could not sleep. Others were out having fun and just chanced upon Pettit's temporary lodging.

The project will culminate tonight with benefit dance featuring The Nelsons. The Lubbock-based group recently won a preliminary round of MTV's nationwide Basement Tapes competition. The dance begins at 7 p.m. in the University Center Ballroom.

One of Pettit's more distinguished visitors was Tech President Lauro Cavazos.

Pettit said Cavazos came by while Pettit was in the Journalism Building using the restroom. "Somebody who was here told me he gave a few bucks and said he would come back later," Pettit said.

Regents consider alternate Devro funding

By ROBIN RYNN CHAVEZ
University Daily Reporter

Members of the Texas Tech Board of Regents, in a meeting with university administrators Monday, decided to recommend the utilization of either general fees, ad valorem tax money or a combination of both to fund the purchase of the Devro building.

The Devro facility is a 110,000-square-foot building on 102 acres of land at Loop 289 and East Fourth Street. The multi-million dollar facility (it has been appraised from $2 million to more than $7 million), has been offered to Tech by a subsidiary of the Johnson & Johnson Corp.

The building would be used for engineering science research, and if, after two years, it had not become self-supporting, it could be sold. The proceeds of any such sale then would be put into the Tech Foundation for scholarships and grants.

Members of the Tech administration will go to Austin Monday for a special meeting of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, which will vote, in part on the purchase of the Devro facility.

Last Wednesday, staff members of the Coordinating Board met in special session on the Tech campus to discuss problems with, among other things, the funding mechanism proposed by university administrators to purchase the building.

The original proposal presented to and accepted by the Tech Board of Regents in January was to use general fees (building use fees) to fund the purchase. The Coordinating Board staff members questioned the ethics of that method.

General or building use fees are part of the student service fees paid by all Tech students.

Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth, a Coordinating Board member, said he does not think using money generated by all students to the benefit of a select few is proper or ethical. He suggested using money from the Tech Foundation or ad valorem tax money to fund the purchase.

All staff members present made it clear that the full Coordinating Board would find it hard to approve the purchase unless some alternate method of funding was found.

Since that meeting, Tech President Lauro Cavazos, Eugene Payne, vice president for finance and administration, and other administrators working on the proposal have been back at the drawing board looking at the possibility of using ad valorem tax funds to fund the purchase.

"We cannot even consider using money from the foundation," Payne said, "as we do not have in it the needed balance in unrestricted funds to purchase the Devro site."

Cavazos told regents present that the state auditor's office had recommended against using the ad valorem tax money because of its limited amount. He added, though, that the office said if it turns out to be absolutely necessary, provisions could be made to purchase Devro through ad valorem monies.

John Birdwell, chairman of the finance and administration committee for the Board of Regents, said he thinks a compromise is in order.

"I agree that the building use fee is the more appropriate solution to the purchasing problem," he said, "but in light of the Coordinating Board staff members' strong recommendation that we find another mechanism, perhaps we could suggest using either building use fees, or ad valorem if necessary, or even better yet, a combination of the two."

Regent Jerry Ford agreed. He said Cavazos and the rest of the presentation committee which is going to Austin first should try to persuade the members that utilization of the general fees is the most available and appropriate means of funding the Devro purchase.

He said if the Coordinating Board totally rejects that idea, however, the group should tell the Coordinating Board that the ad valorem tax money is available, although less desirable, and should suggest using a combination of both sources of money.

"We want to afford ourselves and the Coordinating Board maximum flexibility on this project," Ford said. "We cannot stand to lose such a golden opportunity, so we must be willing to compromise."

Regents said they hope the Coordinating Board members will show the same spirit of compromise when they decide on the issue Monday.

Firm hired to collect late accounts

By KEVIN SMITH
University Daily Reporter

The city recently signed a contract with a local firm to collect delinquent paving and cemetery accounts that amount to more than a half million dollars.

Robert Massengale, assistant city manager, said some of the accounts are as much as 30 years old and could be difficult to collect.

"The money amount does sound large, but collection on these type of things could be fairly difficult," Massengale said. "However, these accounts are something the city council was interested in, so we are going to make the effort to collect on them."

Accounts Management Corp., located at 5201 Indiana Ave., is the company hired by the city to perform the job of collecting the delinquent bills. The company already has taken the first step in collecting the payments — mailing letters to the people concerned.

Delinquent paving bills make up the majority of the money owed, totaling almost a half million dollars. The delinquent paving bills come from home owners who have not paid the city for paving services. There are 576 delinquent paving accounts.

Unpaid cemetery accounts amount to about $150,000 owed to the city. There are about 400 unpaid bills for grave sites in the city cemetery, some of which date from 1941. The bills are owed both by individuals and funeral homes.

Accounts Management Corp. will be paid a percentage of the bills it collects. For the paving accounts, the company will be paid 10 percent for bills 18 to 24 months old; 15 percent for those 24 to 30 months overdue; 20 percent for bills 30 to 36 months old and 25 percent for anything collected that is more than 36 months old.

The company also will collect a percentage of the cemetery accounts collected, with the percentage rising on the basis of decades. Ten percent will be paid to the company for bills collected that stem from the 1980s and 15 percent for those from the 1970s.

Writer wants better taste on issues of private and public preferences

ROBIN RYNN CHAVEZ

Although I realize the issue of homosexuality is especially volatile in a conservative city such as Lubbock, it is one that is increasingly in the forefront of national news.

In certain areas — San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans — homosexuality has become accepted, more or less. But in places like Lubbock it still is considered a moral degradation and a "sin against God."

I begin this editorial in the hopes that those reading it will take into consideration that regardless of one's stance on the issue, it needs to be discussed; because eventually it affects all of us.

College campuses always have been considered environments in which variegated peoples of different backgrounds and philosophies of life mesh and live, for the most part, in harmony.

The Southern Methodist University campus, and many others like it, is facing the problem of dealing with the controversial issue of homosexuality.

On Feb. 14, the SMU Student Senate voted for the third time not to recognize a gay student group seeking to win both official recognition and university funding.

The group, the Gay and Lesbian Student Support Organization (GLSSO), declared it is no different from any other student support group. It reasons that because blacks' and women's support groups have received official recognition on the SMU campus, the gay group should be no different.

On the Phil Donahue show two weeks ago, an officer of the SMU student senate appeared to say the GLSSO was free to converge anywhere on the SMU campus to discuss business or "whatever else they plan on doing" at their meetings.

He claimed he was speaking not only for himself but for the majority of students on the SMU campus as well when he said it would be a detriment to the reputation of the campus if the gay organization were officially recognized.

He said he and others do not want GLSSO to be an official sounding board at SMU. He said many students feel it would damage their reputation and make recruiting of "normal, upstanding and God-fearing students" difficult.

The young man implied he is afraid that recognizing the group will result in a proliferation of gays on the campus. This is ridiculous. Simply giving official support to the group will not result in previously heterosexual students turning gay.

On the contrary, it will only allow the organization to run notices of its meetings in the campus paper and provide emotional support for those gay students at SMU who are unaware that a support group exists for them.

Granted, it may give students previously "in the closet" the opportunity to emerge and find companionship with those of a similar persuasion.

Do not assume that I understand what it is that causes people to turn from what I consider "normal" in sexual and love relationships. I do not. I also do not understand why homosexuals feel they have to announce their sexual preference to the world. I think it is their business, just as my preferences are my business.

After all, I wouldn't go into a job interview and say, "I'm heterosexual, and you had better hire me or I'll sue you for discrimination."

I do, however, have an intrinsic fear of oppression of the few by the many. It has, historically, happened to blacks, women and all types of immigrants in this, the land of the "free."

Many people, intimate friends of mine included, feel that gays are somehow less than human and "ought to be penned up and shot." Isn't this reminiscent of the argument Hitler purported when he slew millions of Jews in the holocaust?

For some reason, I always have felt that sexual preference is similar to whether you like prime rib or hamburger better. To me it's simply a matter of taste. My taste just happens to be what society has deemed the "norm," but far be it from me, or the SMU student senate, to deny someone with dissimilar taste the rights granted to all others.

I firmly believe GLSSO should receive official recognition from the student senate at SMU. I do not believe, however, that the group should receive any funding that is not available to any other student support organization on the SMU campus. If I don't think minorities should be oppressed by the majority, I also don't feel they should take advantage of their position as a minority to acquire unwarranted privileges.

However, even if the student senate comes around and decides to recommend official recognition of the group, and I consider that unlikely, the members of GLSSO would have to face SMU's president, who has vowed to veto any decision from the senate supporting the group. Perhaps a man with so little insight into human nature and constitutionality should not be running an institution of higher education.

The radio was useless. It offered only music to buy groceries by, music to blast a ghetto by and the golden oldies of Sam the Sham and the Pharaohs. By filing my finger tips with sandpaper, I could tune in highbrow radio stations, but that was no good either. When my soul craved Gregorian chants, these stations played Mahler symphonies; when my heart cried out for the songs of Ned Rorem, they mocked me with Handel's greatest hits.

The solution was clear: a phonograph. I owned the ruin of a phonograph, bought in 1949. It hadn't worked since the late 1960s when, maddened one night by the Rolling Stones, I threw an adolescent at it, struck Mick Jagger and shattered every spring in its body.

By the time the adolescents grew up and left home, replacing it had become a problem, for the phonograph had matured into an instrument only slightly less complex than the NASA space shuttle, and I had always been backward in electrical engineering.

Hunger for music, though, impelled me to take the plunge. I went to a department store, pointed to the catalog picture of a machine and ordered it sent to my residence. It arrived last week. To be more precise, they arrived last week — four cardboard boxes whose contents bore suspicious resemblance to certain equipment Colin Clive once used to turn consolidated in the Western Hemisphere — as a prelude to dismantling the one in Cuba," Cleaver said. Cleaver said the administration's strong stand against right-wing "death squads" in El Salvador is to its credit. But he said the Communist guerrillas "are a total death squad — the whole movement is a death squad. They are not in a position to point fingers... the people want freedom and democracy; they don't want a dictatorship of the right as they've experienced in the past — or a dictatorship of the left, which they are threatened with in the future."

And what about this country's military buildup? Dellums "doesn't even favor BB guns in the hands of the American military," Cleaver said. "I know him personally, and the man believes the world would be better off if America would lose power and the Communists would take over."

Stereophonic progress mires buyer

I was starved for music. I wanted to hear Bach toccatas and "Flat Foot Floogie With a Floy Floy." I wanted to hear Gilbert and Sullivan, a Haydn quartet and Jimmy Durante singing "Inka Dinka Doo."

The solution was clear: a phonograph. I owned the ruin of a phonograph, bought in 1949. It hadn't worked since the late 1960s when, maddened one night by the Rolling Stones, I threw an adolescent at it, struck Mick Jagger and shattered every spring in its body.

Eldridge Cleaver redefines policies

COLIN E. KILLIAN

It has been said that the older one grows, the wiser one gets.

I've always thought that adage had a good deal of truth behind it. But I also thought it was limited to only logical human beings; therefore it excluded all liberals.

Alas, I have been in error. Remember Eldridge Cleaver, the former radical leader of the Black Panthers back in the chaotic '60s? Wasn't he the guy who preached so much of that ridiculous stuff known as liberalism in those days of left-wing lunacy?

Yes, it's the same Cleaver. But then again, it's not. He's grown older. And he's wiser up.

Cleaver announced several weeks ago he would challenge Rep. Ron Dellums Boris Karloff into a guttural nincompoop with bolts in his skull. That two records were needed to get results.

I knew, of course, that phonographs were no longer called "phonographs." I even knew that the needle was no longer called a "needle." It was called a "stylus," which, if my seventh-grade Latin teacher was correct, meant "a writing tool." What's more, I knew that the whole mess boxed in cardboard was called a "sound system."

Though I had doubts about the philosophical underpinnings of an industry that would use a writing instrument and an entire system to tickle the ears with "Inka Dinka Doo," I didn't intend to be caught playing the old fogey by whining for the days when a simple hand crank and a Victrola could fill grandmother's parlor with "Who Put the Overalls in Mrs. Murphy's Chowder?"

A man has to face progress like a man. Nowadays, so does a woman, unfortunately for her. I faced it by emptying the four boxes of sound system and studying the assembly directions.

These had apparently been translated literally from demotic Macedonian by a Serb who had flunked out of English and been placed in vocational school to study sound systemics. Not since my own college physics lab report on the torsion-pendulum experiment had I read such a masterpiece of transparent weaseling contrived to hide the author's utter ignorance of the subject at hand.

Hurling it aside, I applied pure reason to the assembly problem. There were two speakers, a cassette player, several miles of wire and two turntables. The two turntables unsettled me. I knew the delicious effect of stereo sound was obtained by placing two speakers apart from each other, but I hadn't realized

This was galling. I had only one record each of "Inka Dinka Doo" and "Flat Foot Floogie With a Floy Floy," and I didn't fancy the expense of buying two copies of every Gregorian chant, Haydn quartet, and Bach toccata needed for my library.

There were astounding numbers of places to connect wires to the cassette players and the turntables, but only one connecting point to each speaker. Logic indicated the proper course. I connected one turntable to one speaker, the cassette player to the other speaker, and the second turntable to the cassette player.

This done, I plugged in the power cords from the cassette player and both turntables, placed "Inka Dinka Doo" on a turntable chosen at random and sat back to hear the immortal Durante. The ensuing silence was intense. It remained intense for several days in spite of rewiring labors that would have exhausted a Con Edison crew.

Awaking in the predawn one morning with a ravenous appetite for a salami sandwich, I descended to the refrigerator and found our neighborhood burglar gazing distastefully at the sound system. "They swindled you, dad," he said. "They didn't send you an amp."

"An amp? I need an amp?" "They messed up in the mailroom. Instead of sending you an amp, they sent a spare turntable."

I thanked him, apologized for not having a new TV set he could burgle, and asked if he intended to take the sound system. "Not without an amp," he said. "Better wake up, old-timer, or the world's going to cheat you blind."

An amp? An amp? Anybody have a Victrola for sale?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

KTXT

To the editor:

The first amendment provides that the state shall not prohibit the free exercise of religion. This language is not consistent with any claim that a state-operated radio station must affirmatively help persons exercise their religion. Moreover, the first amendment specifically prohibits a state from establishing a religion. Taken together, the free exercise and establishment clauses reflect the judgment that the best guarantee of full religious liberty for all persons and some religious, is the separation of church and state.

The Texas Tech general counsel is quoted as saying that it would be censorship if the University administration told KTXT what could not be played, and "we do not do that." I respectfully suggest that the establishment clause could require such censorship by officials of a state university when a radio station operated under their authority broadcasts religious programs because the establishment clause itself imposes constitutional limits on what the state can and cannot do with respect to religion. The Supreme Court has observed that "no state may effectively abdicate its (constitutional) responsibilities by either ignoring them or merely failing to discharge them," and the School Prayer Cases demonstrate that the Supreme Court will enforce the constitutional prohibition on state aid to religion when public school officials have failed to do so.

True, as the general counsel noted, the Supreme Court has recently held that a state university could not deny religious use of meeting rooms to student religious groups, but that case was decided on the basis that the state university had created a "public forum" for a host of student groups pursuing a variety of different interests. Is KTXT a public forum? Can any Tech student or student group have access to KTXT to transmit whatever they want, whether secular or sectarian?

Finally, it should be recalled that the United States Constitution is not the only source of law touching the church-state relationship. The Texas Constitution, Article I, section 6, declares in part: "No money shall be appropriated ... for the benefit of any sect, or religious ...; nor shall any property belonging to the state be appropriated for any such purpose." If KTXT and student fees assessed and collected by Texas Tech are property and money belonging to the state, the student senate resolution hardly seems controversial, especially when it is considered that not all Tech students necessarily share the religious views expressed by the program in question.

Abortion

To the editor:

One of Planned Parenthood's chief goals is "education," as is evident by the factual appeal of K. Shelton and J. Edwards. Only Planned Parenthood tends to overlook such facts as:

● Abortion is a major surgical process which often results in frequent and serious complications, especially relating to young mothers (teens!). Comprehensive studies report that three to 11 percent of suction and D&C abortions done in hospitals will result in immediate complications and 20-30 percent in long-term, negative side effects usually pertaining to later pregnancies. In fact, many countries have restricted or outlawed abortion because of these side effects (which include a high percentage of hemorrhage, infection, future premature births and congenital birth defects, double or triple chances of future miscarriages, and even sterility.)

● Pregnant teens seeking counsel from Planned Parenthood are not required or even advised to consult their parents. They often make decisions that will affect the rest of their lives (physically and emotionally) without counsel of the very ones who care most.

● Eighty to ninety percent of the "quacks in the backwoods" before 1973 were doctors, many of whom are today legally performing abortions.

● A HEW study showed that 75 percent of their sample of women who had aborted had another abortion within one year. (Is Planned Parenthood really educating?)

● In a recent year in the U.S. there were 800,000 couples approved and waiting to adopt babies; only 100,000 were available. There are NO unwanted babies, as Planned Parenthood would have us think.

● Abortion is not "victimless." The "blob of tissue" begins growing from the moment of conception, is separate genetically from its mother and has a heartbeat at 14-28 days (a legal sign of life). At 43 days, brainwaves can be read.

● Abortion may be painless to the mother, but the baby feels pain around eight weeks. How do you think it feels to be burned alive by a saline solution or to be cut into pieces (D&C)?

All facts aside, abortion isn't really the issue. Neither is birth control. The real issue is: are individuals, and society as a whole, going to opt to uphold God's standards, or are we going to continue on our selfish path of immorality and irreverence of life? There is a right and there is a wrong. Every individual has to choose.

15-year-old mistakenly deported

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A distraught father searched Tijuana Monday with Mexican police seeking his 15-year-old son, who was mistakenly deported from California after a street-corner sweep by immigration officials.

Tijuana police issued a bulletin and circulated photos of Mario Moreno Lopez, who was left at the border by Immigration and Naturalization Service agents around midnight last Wednesday.

But the INS said searching was "beyond our jurisdiction." He and 33 other suspected illegal aliens were rounded up that morning on a Santa Ana street corner where Hispanics congregate to wait for rides to work, the INS said.

Capt. Rolando Castillo, a Tijuana police spokesman, said officers in all precincts would "do everything humanly possible" to find him.

The city has about 1.5 million residents, but Castillo said it was unusual that police had not found the boy.

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Druse and Moslem rebel leaders returning from Syria vowed Monday to press their campaign to oust Christian President Amin Gemayel. Army and militia forces dueled with machine guns and grenades in the capital's devastated commercial district.

Italy withdrew its peacekeeping forces from Beirut and a U.S. source said the Marines would leave their airport base by next week.

Saudi Arabia, trying to mediate the bitter differences between Gemayel and his Syrian-backed opposition, sent crown Prince Abdullah bin Abdulaziz and Prince Bandar, the Saudi ambassador to the United States, to Damascus for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

State radio said Gemayel had Foreign Minister Elie Salem forego his trip to Washington and return to Beirut, as Saudi mediator Rafik Hariri was back in the Lebanese capital to continue negotiations.

Salem, who left Beirut Sunday for meetings with the Reagan administration, returned at mid-afternoon Monday, the radio said.

Druse opposition leader Walid Jumblatt and Shiite Moslem head Nabih Berri ended coordination talks with Syria before heading back to Lebanon. In Damascus, Berri demanded Gemayel's resignation.

While Jumblatt issued a similar statement, the demand by Berri indicated a further hardening of the opposition line. Previously Berri had demanded only that Gemayel be censured by shortening his six-year term to two years ending next September.

Berri went to Syrian-held northern Lebanon to meet with former Premier Rashid Karami in Tripoli and former President Suleiman Franjeh in Zhorta, state-run Beirut radio said. Both are Jumblatt's partners in the anti-government National Salvation Front.

Jumblatt was believed to have gone to his ancestral home in Mukhtara, in the Druse-dominated Chouf mountains southeast of Beirut.

Italy's 1,400-man unit moved out of its zone in West Beirut's Sabra and Shatilla Palestinian refugee camps and suburban Bourj el-Barajneh at daybreak. As their ships set sail, shellfire boomed in the distance and police said government troops traded machine-gun and rocket-propelled grenade fire in Beirut's war-ravaged downtown.

More than 1,000 Italians boarded five ships at Beirut port and sailed to Livorno, Italy. About 270 others went to the landing ship Coarle, where they will remain stationed off the Lebanese coast.

Another 100 Italian soldiers stayed in the capital.

It was the second unit of the multinational force to leave Beirut.

USIA blacklist starts controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Director Charles Wick of the United States Information Agency and his associates are trying to put a more favorable light on the agency's "blacklist" — a compilation of 84 people who were not to be invited to take part in USIA's overseas speakers program.

They say they uncovered the list on their own and that those on it were listed for a variety of reasons — not necessarily because they were politically incompatible with Reagan administration thinking.

Salem, who left Beirut Sunday for meetings with the Reagan administration, returned at mid-afternoon Monday, the radio said.

Ha! You should be around when the nearest Episcopal parish is trying to finalize its annual budget. You'd know better.

Actually, this church did acquire a bit of snob appeal during the early days of our nation. English colonists introduced their own Episcopal version of The Church of England. It was only natural that many of these "first comers" became the wealthy landowners, the merchants, the gentry of this young nation. George Washington, Alexander Hamilton and — indeed — three-fourths of the signatories to the U.S. Constitution were Episcopalians.

But today, the Episcopal Church represents an exceptionally broad cross section of the nation: people of every vocation, social status, race and political persuasion gathered under one roof.

You see, Episcopalians believe strongly that the church is a proper meeting ground for men's differences. Christianity, they say, represents the world's greatest hope for reconciling the divisions between one man and another. You don't have to agree with your fellow man; you only have to love him.

Your nearest Episcopal minister may have some very good thoughts for you on that ticklish subject. There's no obligation on your part if you care to pay him a visit.

UC to present Polyvision film 'Napoleon'

By JAN DILLEY
University Daily Lifestyles Writer

Abel Gance had a vision. He wanted to change people's perceptions of early 20th century cinema. To accomplish his goal, he employed a variety of techniques that were recognized later as being decades ahead of their time. Gance's introduction of Polyvision, a method that used three cameras and three projectors to produce a huge image, predated the modern Cinerama wide screen by 30 years.

Local moviegoers will get a chance to see the late filmmaker's efforts to captivate his audiences when the University Center Films Committee presents the four-hour Napoleon at 6 p.m. Wednesday in the Center Theater.

"This is the film to see for the whole year," said Kathy Walker, committee chairperson. "It will be sheer artistic enjoyment."

"This is the film to see for the whole year."

— Walker

With a full orchestra accompaniment, the silent film premiered on April 7, 1927. Although viewers lauded the production after its release, they lost interest in the movie with the advent of sound movies just six months after Napoleon first was shown.

Before long, copies of the film drifted from its creator. "It was lost for 20 years," Walker said. "It was chopped up and its pieces spread throughout Europe."

Eventually, segments of the film were located and attempts were made to reconstruct the movie. Complete restoration of Napoleon ended in 1981; however, no music was available for a re-release of the production. Director Francis Ford Coppola undertook the project of presenting the reconstructed movie to an anxious American audience. His father, Carmine Coppola, wrote an original score for the movie, and after a tour in which the music was played by a live orchestra, the Milan Symphony recorded the music in Dolby stereo.

A former actor and writer for the stage, Gance did not live to see the success Napoleon is experiencing in cities around the country. The cinema pioneer died at age 91 in 1981.

During its film selection process last semester, the UC committee decided to nominate Napoleon as one of its "extra drama" movies for the spring term. Because the film's rental cost $1,000 for a single showing, ticket prices will be $2 with Texas Tech ID, slightly higher than normal. No Cinematheque passes will be accepted for the special showing.

Because the movie will last more than four hours, there will be a 15-minute intermission with punch and coffee. According to Walker, Napoleon covers a wide variety of subject areas. "We hope to draw people from all the departments, from history to English."

She said she hopes the screening will attract viewers from Lubbock as well as from Tech. "We were fortunate to get this film here," she said. "The only way Lubbock's going to see this is if they come to Tech."

Tech faculty recital to feature piano quartet music

A faculty recital featuring piano quartet music will be offered by James Barber, violin; Susan Schoenfeld, viola; Arthur Follows, violoncello; and Thomas Redcay, piano, at 8:15 p.m. today in Texas Tech's Hemmle Recital Hall.

The quartet's program consists of the two romantic chamber works: Dvorak's "Quartet in E Flat, Op. 87," and the "Quartet in G Minor, Op. 25" by Brahms.

The G minor quartet is known for its melodic interest. The first movement is full of passion and vitality, its scherzo is delicate and mysterious, the intermezzo is brooding and the finale is a hot-blooded Hungarian dance.

By contrast, the Dvorak quartet is one of that composer's latest chamber works, conceived as a sonata for four instruments, so that there is little "taking of sides."

Barber, a professor of violin, debuted at Carnegie Hall in 1962. He has soloed with many community and university orchestras, including the Charleston, Houston and Lubbock symphony orchestras.

Schoenfeld, an assistant professor of viola, also coaches the viola ensemble. She has performed as soloist with orchestra and recitalist in New York, Italy, Bolivia, El Salvador, Costa Rica, North Carolina, New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and Texas.

Follows is an associate professor of violoncello. He has been principal cellist of the 7th Army Symphony Orchestra in Europe as well as the Plymouth, Roswell and Lubbock symphony orchestras.

Redcay, a professor of piano, performed at the White House twice for President and Mrs. Eisenhower.

Admission to the recital is free.

Author Angelou to lecture here

Maya Angelou, author of I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings, will lecture at 8:15 p.m. Thursday in the University Center Theater. Angelou also published a poetry collection, Just Give Me a Cool Drink of Water 'fore I Die. She has studied dance in San Francisco and has toured Europe and Africa in Porgy and Bess. Angelou also has produced, directed and starred in Cabaret for Freedom in collaboration with Godfrey Cambridge.

Tickets for her lecture cost $2.50 for students, $3 for faculty and staff and $3.50 for the general public. All tickets will cost $3.50 the day of the lecture. Tickets are on sale at the UC ticket booth.

Comedians derive humor from common occurrences

Greely

The University Daily / R.J. Hinkle

By PETE WILKINS
University Daily Staff

Fat Dawg's was the place for comedy last Thursday night with the arrival in Lubbock of two comedians, Fred Greely and Bill Hicks. The two comedians, based at The Comedy Workshop in Houston, came to take part in the FMX comedy night. Each comedian took the stage for 30 minutes, followed by a short break and then another set of 30 minutes.

Greely took the stage first, establishing an instant rapport with the audience. By asking questions and inviting responses, the comedian got the crowd to loosen up and participate in the fun.

Once the crowd was going, Greely fired off a series of jokes that sent the audience into gales of laughter.

An example of Greely's humor is his joke about a guy walking up to an unattractive girl in a bar and asking, "Can I buy you a bowl of water, bitch?" He was careful not to be one-sided, however, and offended guys and girls equally. For example, he showed the crowd his impersonation of a man who "had a face that could stop a truck," as well as illustrating the insecurities that pass through a guy's mind as he prepares to ask a girl to dance. Judging from the self-conscious laughter of the males in the crowd, his description was accurate.

Hicks took the stage shortly after Greely's first set, offering some of his impersonations to the crowd. Like Greely, Hicks covered a variety of material, often focusing on parent-child relationships. Both comedians illustrated their material with examples that seemed to represent experiences common to the whole crowd, which made their jokes credible as well as funny. Surprisingly, however, neither comedian attributes his jokes to true-life experiences.

"You either have it or you don't, and I happen to have this man in my closet that writes jokes. He just slips them under the door," Hicks said during an interview.

Greely, on the other hand, gets his material from true-life experiences, but not his own. "I write my material from Hicks' true-life experiences," he said.

"... The ones I throw away," Hicks responded.

Both comedians have been working for about five years, but they "don't necessarily tour together all of the time," according to Greely.

"There are 500 comedians in the country, and it's a matter of who gets booked where," Greely said.

Although both comedians said they thought the Thursday night audience was good, neither of them was appreciative of the persistent heckling from certain members of the crowd.

"They (the hecklers) were not adding to the show," Hicks said. "They weren't witty, they weren't helping, they were just drunk, and they were annoying. Comics do not like that, beyond common belief."

Hicks denied that any of the heckling was set up in advance. "No; I hire three drunks everywhere I go," he said.

"You pay for a ticket to see a comic, you're paying to come in, and listen to what he has to say," Greely said. "And that's what 99.9 percent of the people out there are doing. And they're having a good time."

"What happens is, you get three guys who, whether they're drunk or not, want to have some spotlight. They're looking for attention. They just yell out inane stuff without listening to the act, or coming up with something intelligent to say," Greely said.

"They're just yelling out stuff, like 'beer!' And what that does, even if you come up with a good line to put them down, the audience goes 'yaaaay.' That's not what they pay to see. You pay to see comedians do a show," he said.

"But when the audience yells at the heckler to shut up, that's when you feel the divided attention," Hicks said. "As a comedian, it's best to ignore him, because he'll just get tired. What the hecklers are doing is looking for attention. If you ignore them, they won't get attention. And eventually, they'll shut up."

"The audience is fine," Greely said of the Thursday night crowd. "They're pretty loose. They like me; they're pretty intelligent."

Both Greely and Hicks said they prefer a "loose" audience. "The nightclub atmosphere in general is preferable," Hicks said. Both comedians also said that they prefer to do their sets in an hour, rather than two sets of 30 minutes.

"The weird thing about doing two sets in front of the same audience is that you have to think of things like, 'What didn't I do?' or 'What did I do, so I won't do it again?' You usually do different sets for different audiences," Hicks said.

According to Hicks, both comedians could be on the road as long as six to eight weeks at a time. "It can be that way," he said. "You don't have to do that. It is always available."

"Two weeks into that eight-week gig is when it starts getting tiring," Greely said.

"This is a one-nighter," Hicks said. "We go back to Houston tomorrow, and then on to Huntsville on Saturday."

Ashby, Raiders set for home opener

By CHIP MAY
University Daily Sports Writer

The Texas Tech baseball team opens its 1984 home season at 2 p.m. today when it faces defending NAIA national champion Lubbock Christian College at the Texas Tech Diamond.

The Raiders, who swept three games from Hardin-Simmons last weekend, hope to get revenge for six losses to the LCC Chaps last year.

"I'm embarrassed about losing to them six straight times last year. That shouldn't happen against any team on any level," Tech coach Gary Ashby said.

Tech owns a 3-0 record after defeating Hardin-Simmons, 19-11, 5-0 and 6-3 in the weekend road trip. LCC, meanwhile, stands at 4-5 for the season.

The Chaparrals compiled their record by losing two of three games to NCAA Division I Arizona State, the No. 1 team in the nation. LCC then split four games with Grand Canyon College and two games with Western New Mexico.

"I have all the respect in the world for (LCC coach Larry) Hays. They have a lot of good ball players," Ashby said. "They're ahead of us. They've played about eight or nine games. It should be a high-scoring game."

Tech hammered Hardin-Simmons pitchers for 10 home runs and eight doubles in last weekend's series. Eight Raider batters are hitting above .300.

Raider center fielder Mark Michna went seven of 11 against HSU and was four for four in the Friday game. Right fielder Todd Howey, last year's Southwest Conference batting champ, was five for 12 at the plate with three home runs. Catcher John Grimes returned to the Tech lineup and was five for 12 with one home run.

"We won all three, but weren't satisfied," Ashby said. "Hardin-Simmons was a good team to start out with. They're a good average ball club."

Michna's effort against the Hardin-Simmons' team puts him ahead of the remainder of the Tech squad with a .636 average. Designated hitter Mitchell Jones, Jr., is batting .500 while Grimes is hitting at .417.

Freshman pitcher Clay Hollock (0-0) is expected to start for Tech against the Chaps.

Tech netters post wins

The Texas Tech men's and women's tennis teams defeated West Texas State and Kansas State during the weekend.

The men netters dropped WTSU 7-2 and then defeated KSU 9-0; the women won both dual matches by scores of 9-0.

The men will take the road for the first time during the 1984 season when they travel to Albuquerque, N.M., for three dual matches. The women, meanwhile, will host Arkansas at 6 p.m. Saturday.

The men will challenge Big Eight power Oklahoma Friday at the University of New Mexico courts, tangle with Arizona State Saturday and finish the series Sunday against host New Mexico.

"It should be a good trip for us," men's coach Ron Damron said. "All three teams are very competitive. We'd feel good if we could come out of it with two wins."

The women lost only two sets in 18 matches during the weekend, improving their overall record to 13-4 and their spring record to 2-0. Pam Booras, playing in the No. 1 position, lost only five games in singles play while No. 3 Lisa Lebold surrendered only one game.

The men's No. 1 player, Vince Menard, was equally impressive in posting two wins. The Raiders lost only one singles match and one doubles match during weekend play. But it was Menard who caught Damron's eye.

"We played well for so early in the year," Damron said. "I was especially impressed with Vince Menard."

Myers wary of talented Arkansas

By LYN MCKINLEY
University Daily Sports Writer

From the neck down, Gerald Myers looked like Jim Valvano at his Monday press conference. A striped tie crossed a neatly pressed tan shirt and dark brown coat. From the adam's apple upward, he was Eddie Sutton.

The coach spoke just a few words about his own team's narrow victory against Rice. One compliment about Bubba Jennings' 28 points and a quick mention about the steady play of Dwight Phillips and Phil Wallace. That's not the way to prepare for the 14th-ranked team in the nation. The "our guys" speech and "we'll win if we want to" entreaty was left behind.

How do you prepare for Arkansas, coach? The Eddie Sutton way.

"Against Arkansas, we'll have to do a good job defensively inside on the post," Myers said quickly before leaving for a Rotary Club appearance. "Joe Kleine is one of the three big centers in our league. We haven't had any luck defending those guys or even slowing them up very much.

"We'll have to do a better job on him (Kleine) in the Arkansas game if we expect to have any success against the Razorbacks," the coach continued.

"They're not a one-man or two-man team by any means," Myers said.

"They've got Balentine (Charles) and Sutton (Leroy) and Ricky Norton, who's developed into a very heady smart point guard."

Is there anything else about the Hogs?

"We're not only concerned with stopping Kleine inside because stopping him with more than one player opens up easy opportunities for the other guys," Myers explained.

"Arkansas is also a great defensive team. They've probably got more overall quickness, if that's possible, than the last two years."

"They (Arkansas) will put pressure on the ball and pressure in the passing lanes," Myers said. "We're going to have some problems getting into our offense and executing the way we want to against their defense."

Myers made only one comment on what the Raiders will do to prepare for the Hogs, saying they'll try both the zone and man-to-man defense against the across-the-border rivals.

But you can bet he has plenty of plans in his mind. Strategies that will come to life on the court. In the best of a strategic coach's way.

Tech's sixth man crucial

GERALD MYERS

Thursday we have a return game with Arkansas in the Coliseum, and with the help of our students, we have the opportunity to upset the 14th-ranked Razorbacks.

The game is important for both teams as far as the Southwest Conference standings are concerned. Any time we play the Hogs it is a great challenge for us, since they have become a nationally ranked team the last several years.

This year the game is more important to us than just playing another good Arkansas team. The significance of the game is that it could be a big step in our efforts to gain a bye in the first round of the SWC postseason tournament and advance directly to the tournament final site in Houston.

In our first meeting we outplayed Arkansas the first half of the game, going in at halftime with a four-point lead. Arkansas came back in the second half with a great effort to win the game. Their crowd played a big role in that win in Fayetteville, as they have done in so many home games for Arkansas.

Thursday night the state of Arkansas will take a break during the game to watch the Hogs and Raiders play basketball. Our students can once again, as in the A&M game, show a great spirit and pride for Texas Tech.

You can be a tremendous boost for our team by becoming involved in the game for 40 minutes with deafening noise and support for your team. By being involved throughout the game, you can keep constant pressure on the Arkansas players and not allow them time to think clearly.

You can pick our team up when Arkansas has things going their way. When we make a good play and the momentum shifts our way, you can intensify the pressure by raising the noise to an even higher level.

It is the type game that everyone can get pumped up for, and you can help us as a sixth man in the stands Thursday night against a very good Arkansas basketball team.
