

Colorado Staggers Red Raiders, 67-60

Some 8,000 non-partisan basketball fans witnessed the second round of the NCAA basketball finals last night in Manhattan, Kansas, that saw the Texas Tech Red Raiders go down in defeat at the hands of the University of Colorado 67-60.

It was an uphill battle all the way for the Raiders as they never could quite top the hill.

The opening tip-off was controlled by Colorado but Harold Hudgens quickly gained control to erase the zeroes from the scoreboard with the first two points.

That was the first and only time the Raiders led in the game despite a brilliant defensive effort throughout in a constant attempt to overtake the Buffaloes.

Del Ray Mounts was the leading scorer of the game with 19 points followed closely by Colorado's Ken Charlton with 18.

The Raiders retired at half-time burdened by an 11-point deficit, but quickly bounced back in the opening moments of the second half to narrow the margin to four points.

With 10:54 remaining the "basketball giants of the Southwest Conference" were sitting in a much better position trailing by only five points, 53-48.

In the eight minutes of play that followed, the Raiders were held to only five points while Colorado scored only a meager seven. The time element was the important factor for the Buffs at this stage of the game.

It was during these waning minutes that the superior defensive effort of the Raiders took the spotlight. With 3:30 left in the game Coach Gene Gibson called a time out, and the Raiders had their work cut out for them.

In the time that followed Colorado went into their delaying game and, outside of the desperation fouls committed by the Raiders in an attempt to gain possession of the ball, the Buffs had sewn up a victory.

Roger Hennig was the only player on either team to foul out and did so with only one second showing on the clock.

It will go down in the record books as a split between the two teams in season play with Colorado winning the important one. Tech beat the Big 8 Conference champions in their first home game of the year in a two-overtime thriller.

Tech falls into the consolation bracket of the tournament and Colorado will advance into the second session of the tourney. Tech will meet the loser of the Cincinnati-Creighton game at 7 p.m. tonight, with Colorado tackling the winner of that game immediately following.

THIS IS IT!—SMITH

An Editorial...

Change for change's sake has been condemned since the beginning of time.

The students of this university are now faced with a like proposition.

As a few of the more observant among us have noticed, the Toreador has campaigned loud and long for the name change, although not originating the idea.

Now, however, we are given four choices, two of which would be no better, and perhaps worse, than our present inappropriate title.

Texas Tech University, and the more "intellectual" Texas Technological University, are almost too ludicrous to discuss, if it weren't for the high number of votes they polled in the last election.

In the first place, there is no such word as "Tech." To think of having in our official name a word that does not even exist is too humiliating to contemplate. And to think that this non-existent title was suggested by the Executive Board of the Ex-Students is even worse.

Perhaps we aren't deserving of the title of "University" after all, if the thinking of all graduates is this stifled by tradition.

As regards "Texas Technological University," this is an amusing, but rather pitiful attempt at "pedantic padding," which means absolutely nothing.

Not only are the words "Technological" and "University" incompatible and contradictory, but by very definition the two are paradoxical.

Technological University would literally mean "a university composed of various schools of technology." This, of course, defeats the entire purpose of incorporating "university" into our name.

Another consideration would be the justifiable ridicule from every other university in the country, and the general confusion to prospective "recruits."

Texas Technological College is a misnomer. It should be changed. But it must be a meaningful change.

It's better to stay a misnomer, than to become a laugh-ing-stock!

Publications Seek Editors, Manager

All students interested in filling positions on Tech publications should take applications to Phil Orman, director of student publications

Applications for editors of the Toreador and La Ventana should be sent to Orman's office in the Journalism Bldg. no later than 5 p.m. April 2. The positions of business manager for both publications are also open.

Prospective editors must be juniors or seniors and in their applications include reasons for applying.

Tech Lauds Achievers Tomorrow

Recognition services honoring Tech students for outstanding scholastic achievement and leadership are slated at 2 p.m. Sunday in the downstairs Ballroom of the Tech Union.

Principal speaker at the all-college awards ceremony will be President R. C. Goodwin. James Allen, dean of student life, is master of ceremonies.

The Tech Choir, under the direction of Gene Kenney, will sing "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men" and "Gloria."

Eighty-two varsity lettermen and 150 scholarship recipients will also be cited. Introducing the athletes will be Dr. J. W. Davis, government department head, while George G. Heather, dean of business administration, will present scholarship holders.

The highest ranking students from their respective schools will be introduced by S. M. Kennedy, dean of arts and sciences.

President Goodwin will present the 10 students who have maintained top grades for the past four years. The 30 students to be cited for scholastic achievement for the third year will be recognized by John Bradford, dean of engineering, while Gerald Thomas, dean of agriculture, presents second-year Class Honors to 56 students.

"This is it. We are going to take a stand," Carlyle Smith, student Assn. president, said in commenting on the Council's decision to have a special vote Wednesday to determine "the new name for Tech."

The Student Council decided in an action-packed Thursday night meeting that it will give its full backing in negotiations for a name change to the name Techsians choose Wednesday.

Four names, those receiving the greatest number of votes in the March 7 election, will be on the ballot. They are Texas State University, Texas Technological University, Texas Tech University and Texas State University of Arts, Sciences and Technology.

Representatives and visitors saw two and a half hours of arguments, debates, amendments and motions Thursday night. Council members devoted a major portion of the meeting to debate on how they should cast their electoral votes.

At several points, Smith had to call the meeting to order with a loud bang of the gavel. Several persons gave strong orations, notably Rep. Amen Burton and Vice President Wayne Underwood. Several visitors expressed their views.

Four systems of casting the representatives' electoral votes were debated. 1. A strict electoral college vote system in which representatives would cast their vote for the name receiving the majority of votes in their school.

2. A total tabulation system in which representatives would cast their votes for the name receiving the majority of votes.

3. A system in which council members would act on their own conscience and vote according to their own dictates.

4. A modified electoral system in which representatives only would cast their votes in the exact proportions of the voting preferences in each individual school.

The Council members heatedly argued the merits of each system. On one occasion, a motion had five amendments to it. Several motions were repeated with slightly different wording. The fourth system was finally approved.

Agreement was reached earlier in the meeting that the council was definitely going to support a new name for Tech and negotiate for its acceptance in all meetings with the Faculty Assn., the Ex-Students Assn. and the Administration. They will begin action as soon as the results of Wednesday's vote is tabulated and canvassed.

In Wednesday's vote, Techsians will cast ballots according to their school. In order for their vote to be accepted, they must indicate a first and second choice of new names. If a second choice is not indicated, the vote will be declared null and void.

The second choice counts one-half the value of the first choice in electoral votes. "This will be a mathematical tabulation done by our business manager," Underwood said. The apportionment of the electoral votes among the representatives will be according to the spring enrollment figures.

As an example of the modified electoral system, Underwood said that a name getting 30 per cent of the total votes of a school with seven representatives in the Council will get 2.1 electoral votes. "Under this system there will be a better cross-section of student opinion," Smith said. The Council approved the system Thursday with about half a dozen dissenting votes from representatives. The Council executive officers will not cast electoral votes under the system.

Graduates are reminded that they must vote according to the academic school that they are enrolled in and not their classification.

The March 7 voting breakdown was Texas State University, 1668; Texas Technological University, 1475; Texas Tech University, 442; and Texas State University of Arts, Sciences and Technology, 328.

Tech Council Offers Election Petitions

Petitions will be available starting Wednesday in the Student Council office for persons desiring to campaign for cheerleader, Council executive or representative positions.

Techsians will vote for cheerleaders and council executive officers on April 11. The representative election will be April 18. The spring election rally is set for April 10.

Council office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. except for the noon hour.

Petitions are due April 4 at 5 p.m. in the Student Council Office.

Tech Union Plans 'Give-Away,' Tour

More than $4,000 worth of "give-aways" will be presented to students attending the opening of the Tech Union's new million-dollar edition at 8 p.m. Monday.

A large turnout of students is expected. Girls will be given late permission until 11 p.m.

Bingo, billiards, pool, snooker and ping pong tournaments will be underway in the basement with prizes being awarded to winners.

Successful Tech Play Draws Warm Praise

"The play was a success," commented Judy Huddleston, freshman drama major, in summing up the premier performance of "The Cave Dwellers." The production was presented for the first time by the Tech speech department Thursday night.

A four-month old toy French poodle, Pierre, appeared on stage for a few moments. Jane Spencer, owner of Pierre and assistant director of the play, commented after the show: "Pierre was the toast of the company prior to the show, and he's let success go to his head. He is very proud of his debut."

Dr. Melville Larson, head of the speech department, said the play "gave an interesting reflection of how people behave toward one another when they are in strained circumstances and are reduced to being just human beings." He felt the "Cave Dweller" cast did a good job of putting this idea across.

"The Cave Dwellers," by William Saroyan, was first performed in New York in 1957. The setting is the stage of an abandoned theater located in the midst of a slum-clearing project in New York. The theater is the home of two actors—both old and unemployed. They are joined later in the play by other "has-been" actors.

Rick Malone, Tech director of Lubbock Theater Center, said, "I enjoyed the play very, very much. It was excellently done."

The tickets have been selling fast, according to June Bearden, director. She said there are many good seats available for the Monday through Wednesday productions.

Tickets are $1. Reservations can be made through the box office of the speech department.

The top ten finalists were Dorothy Gates, Lady Jane Henry, Donna King, Jan Mayo, Betty Mosher, Linda Ann Nolan, Judith Ann Roberts, Brenda Rogers and Nan Taylor.

These ten beauties and Miss Playmate will meet Tuesday night at 7:30 in Journalism 208 to discuss the details of the trip.

JFK Approves Poll Tax Oust

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Kennedy in a letter made public today, said adoption of a constitutional amendment abolishing the poll tax would constitute an important contribution to good government.

It would encourage wider voter participation in the elections for president, vice president and members of Congress, he said.

The President's letter was made public in the midst of a Senate battle over an antipoll tax amendment.

'THE REDDEST RAIDER'

Raider Chances Brighten As Wall Returns

One of the most promising returning members of the Red Raider basketball team next year will be a 6'3" sophomore from Dallas, Sid Wall.

Sid earned himself the title of "sixth man" for Coach Gene Gibson's Red Raiders this year and proved that he could hold his own against the teams of the Southwest Conference.

Many times Red Raiders fans could look up to see Sid trotting onto the court to replace one of the five starters who was just a little tired or perhaps just a little off his game that night.

Bobby Gindorf, last year's "sixth man" said, "It sure is nice to know that we can look over to the bench and have guys ready to go that can take any one of the five starters place and do a good job."

This was Sid's primary function this year; but in the future, Red Raider fans can plan on seeing a lot of this young man wearing the red and black colors of Texas Tech. While in high school, Sid lettered two years on the South Oak Cliff Golden Bears and made the all-district and all-state team his senior year.

Sid said that he came to Tech for the simple reason that Lubbock is a good basketball town and everyone was so friendly to him when he came to visit.

Sid plays basketball the year around in order to keep in shape and not to lose his shooting eye.

... returns next year.

Raiders Meet SW Oklahoma

Tech baseballers will square off against Southwest Oklahoma State this afternoon on the field south of the Coliseum.

"Game time is 2:30 p.m." said Coach Burl Huffman, "and we're hoping for a large crowd. There is no admission charge and everyone is cordially welcome."

The Raiders opened the season with a three game stint with Highlands University of Las Vegas, Nev. Tech won two and dropped the third.
