

Synthetic oil agency needed

James Reston

There are not many miraculous new ideas around here for solving the energy crisis, but there is one old idea that is beginning to get thoughtful consideration among some influential members of the executive branch, the Congress, and the private sector.

This is that the United States government should create a financing institution like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of World War II days to help private industry produce five million barrels of synthetic oil a day - over 20 percent of our current needs - within the next five to ten years.

A detailed memorandum of this proposal - prepared by Lloyd Cutler, a Washington lawyer and special ambassador of the Carter administration, Paul R. Ignatius, former secretary of the Navy, and Eugene M. Zuckert, a former member of the Atomic Energy Commission - is now being studied at the Department of Energy, the Office of Management and Budget and also in other concerned agencies of the executive branch and key committees of the Congress.

The Cutler-Zuckert-Ignatius memo makes the following points:

-Three months after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in December 1941, 90 percent of the world's natural rubber came under enemy control. By the end of the war in 1945, 87 percent of the rubber consumed in the United States was synthetic, almost all of it produced in government-financed plants built by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and operated by private industry.

-"The long-run cost to the government of these programs," the memo says, "was negligible. Most of the government-owned World War II plants were sold to their private operators or others at prices that largely recouped their costs."

-THE TECHNOLOGY TO CREATE a government-private synthetic oil industry from such sources as coal, shale, tar sands, heavy oils and farm products is just as available now as the technology to establish a synthetic rubber industry was in the early days of the last world war.

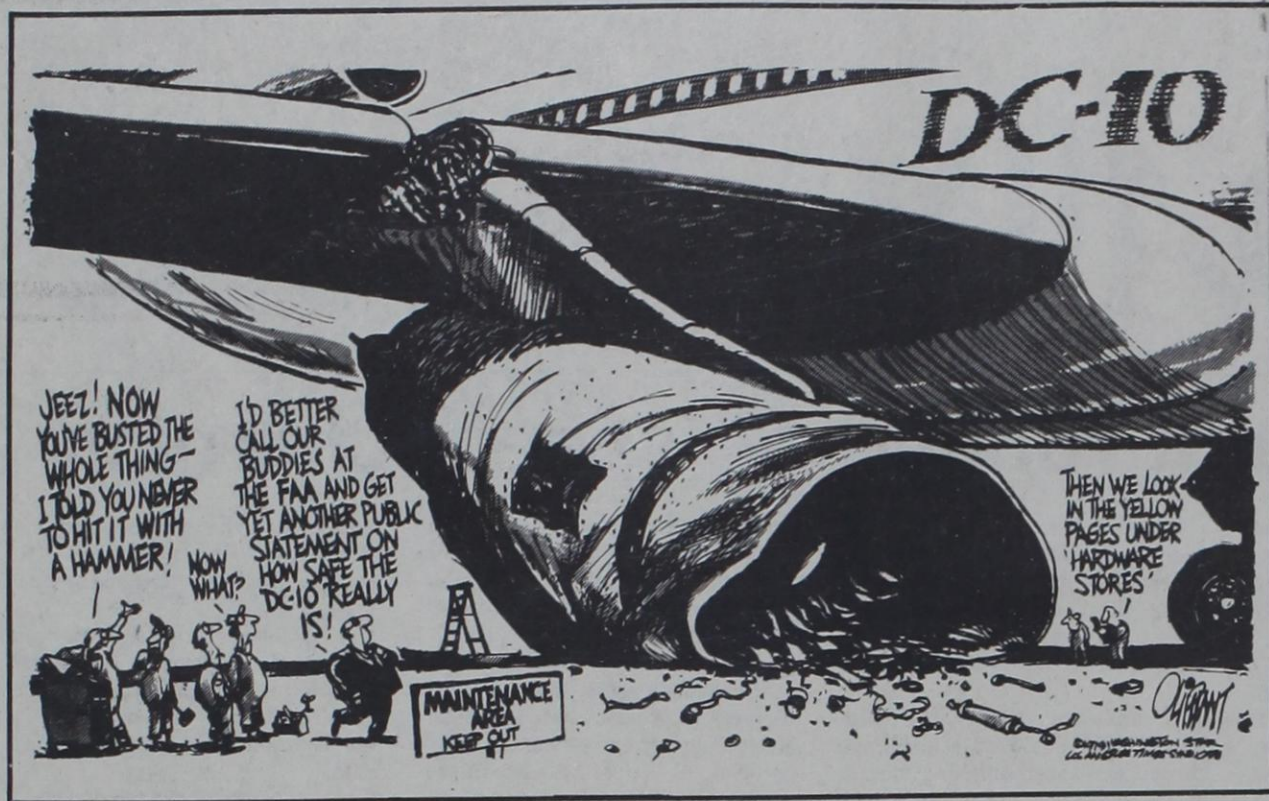

-The question is whether we now have the will and the money, the authors suggest. Their preliminary cost estimates are formidable. The memo suggests that the one-time cost of producing each one million barrels of synthetic oil a day might run as high as $20 to $40 billion over the next 5 to 15 years - or $100 to $200 billion to achieve the goal of five billion barrels of synthetic a day.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES is now considering an amendment to the Defense Production Act that would provide loan guarantees of $2 billion to increase domestic fuel production, but this clearly does not begin to deal with the magnitude of the problem.

Substantial additional supplies can be obtained only if we undertake an expedited program to produce synthetic oil in sufficient quantities to provide the energy security the United States and its friends need in the critical period before solar and other energy applications are capable of making their full contribution...

But there is a fundamental division within the Carter administration about facing the financial and also the political costs of such a program, between those who really believe the fuel crisis is "the moral equivalent of war" and requires dramatic wartime measures; and those who think the oil crisis is not all that serious and fear that such a program would be the political equivalent of defeat in the 1980 presidential election. This is quite a difference, and it is far from being resolved.

Hamlet: not a musical

Russell Baker

Noting my recent adventure in the musical theater, a Poughkeepsie woman writes to ask, "Why didn't Shakespeare ever write a musical, since that's where the big theater bucks seem to lie? Wouldn't 'Hamlet' have run almost as long as 'Grease' if it had been done as a musical?"

The fact is that Shakespeare did consider doing 'Hamlet' as a musical, but decided against it after three minutes of reflection. Some of his considerations were as follows:

1. Everybody would tell him that "Hamlet" was a terrible title for a musical, and the producers would reinforce the argument with a market survey showing that seven out of 10 people would rather see a show with the word "happy" in the title. The publicity agent would warn him that if he persisted in calling it 'Hamlet,' Broadway wise guys would laugh him out of existence by knocking it in the gossip columns as "Hamlet and Egglets."

2. INSTEAD OF SETTING the opening on a dark castle parapet with three male actors waiting for a ghost, he would have to revise the script to open in a sunlit square with 30 dancers singing about the gaiety of Renaissance Italy.

3. The role of Ophelia would have to be beefed up to support at least four songs because the producer would never be able to persuade a female star to take the role unless she had as many songs as the leading man.

4. The plot would have to be changed to eliminate the deaths of Polonius, Claudius, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, Ophelia, Laertes and Hamlet because nobody would go to see a musical in which somebody dies.

5. All the soliloquies would have to be cut to three lines apiece to prevent the audience from falling asleep between musical numbers.

IN FACT, AS Shakespeare wrote in his memoirs, he had the ingenuity to make these necessary changes and might well have had a hit as successful as "The Wiz." It was the little things that finally set his mind against the project.

He knew, for example, that his best lines would be appropriated by the lyricist and set to music. This would produce irritation and bad feeling.

"You cannot have Hamlet saying, 'To be or not to be,'" the lyricist would tell him. Shakespeare did not have to ask why. He knew the immutable law of the musical theater. If "To be or not to be" was to be sung in "Bare Bodkin," Hamlet's big production number with the whole chorus, it could not be spoken in the dialogue.

In any case, everybody had told him you couldn't have a successful musical unless you could explain in one sentence what it was about, and, as Shakespeare used to tell Ben Jonson over ale at the Mermaid Tavern, "How do I know what 'Hamlet's' about? If I knew what it was about, I would have written it in a sentence instead of five acts."

Mexican beauty

To the Editor:
I thought your article in the June 8 UD, on marijuana, was quite informative. I found one error, though. I think the Mexican state you referred to was Oaxaca rather than the way it was spelled in the paper. It may be the hardest state for people to spell correctly; everybody I know has trouble with it. Maybe it was the typography.

I don't know about the marijuana, but Oaxaca is a beautiful place. If you haven't visited there yet, I hope you have a chance to visit soon.

KK traffic trap

To the Editor:
During the May break between classes, (University Holiday, i.e. no students, no traffic), I was ticketed for allegedly having "run" a red light on campus. This incident occurred on Flint, at the corner of the Business Administration Building.

At any rate, I did not violate a red light, but the officer insisted that I had "run the light." This case has been to court and a judgment reached, however, I wish to comment on the conduct of the officer during the arrest. In my opinion, he was excessively over-bearing, insolent, and intimidating.

Having been trained as carrier pilot and commissioned in the Marine Corps, I have some insight regarding how persons designated as "officers" conduct themselves.

I also have had considerable experience responding to signals (aboard carriers) and I know I did not cross on red. I believe the judge reached his decision (guilty) based solely on his reluctance to show discrimination.

If he let another "honkey" off how would it look?

The officer was hiding next to the Administration Building and while you EXPECT to find this sort of traffic trap in Georgia, one hopes that a University campus might view these tactics with disgust.

On my return from my office, (20 minutes after my arrest, the officer was tagging another car, ...same place, same hiding place and same repugnant game.

While the University is being stolen "blind" in Holden Hall, our law enforcement personnel chase drivers who are perhaps lulled into a sense of complacency by two flashing caution lights, only to be confronted by a red light plus a hidden patrol vehicle.

If the driver happens to be faculty (and this was known to the officer), this seems to stimulate these guardians of the peace, and the scene becomes fraught with "authoritarian" commands. The officer took 20-25 minutes to write a simple ticket and strut around the area. It was a University holiday, and I presume he had nothing else to do. Unfortunately I did.

Carriers exist to deliver pilots to a target area. ALL OTHER PERSONNEL are in supportive roles. Universities exist to facilitate an exchange between students and faculty. ALL OTHER PERSONNEL on campus are ( or should be) in supportive roles. I think the "police" on this campus have a severe role identity problem.

Choice protection

To the Editor:
Amidst all of our problems let us be thankful that Carter has not involved any engineers in the technical decisions after all of the horrible things that they have done to us: designed the planes and manufacturing practices that played such a large part in winning WWII, designed the dams that provide so much energy without dependence on any fuel, designed the homes that shelter us in relative comfort at prices that the average man can afford, provided the T.V. system that brings so much entertainment into our homes, provided the modern medical center and the means for producing all of the miracle drugs, designed the machines that allow us to produce enough foodstuffs to feed a large part of the world, etc. ad infinitum.

Our dear President protects us from these bad guys by making sure that not one single high level engineering position in Washington is filled by a qualified engineer.

Making these important engineering decisions are economists (the economy is going to hell), lawyers (anyone want to congratulate our legal system that emphasizes the right of judges to escape responsibility for their acts), models (superannuated at that).

If it is bad with all of these worthies making the engineering decisions just think how intolerable it would be if we allowed engineers to make them.

John Wayne memorialized

Death profitable

Shauna Hill

Money mongers move fast. John Wayne died at 5:30 p.m. Monday and the profiteers were promoting gripping accounts of his life and death two hours later.

One promoter promises "an exciting profile of John Wayne in the form of a 160-page hard-cover book in 8 1/2-by-11-inch format," and supposedly features "fascinating glimpses of John Wayne at work and play ... and intimate photos of Wayne and his family."

And of course it sells for only $5.95, nearly half the regular retail cost of the book.

Another publicity department pledges "never before published photographs and stories 'The Duke' kept out of print."

How revolting. More than 200 movies and 50 years of legend reduced to a book and a scandal.

And one book and one scandal will multiply into countless books and revelations that may or may not deal with the true life of one man from Winterset, Iowa.

It's probably a blessing that Wayne died before someone found a way to get "private, confidential tapes" of his last conversations with his family.

Wayne symbolized traditional American values - decency, vitality, determination, patriotism, fearlessness and the willingness to fight for beliefs.

He fought cancer with the same bravado that he fought the outlaws, Indians and Nazis in his adventure films.

But Wayne also fought those who said the battle against cancer was impossible. He fought those who wanted him to give up and become another vegetable existing through chemicals and tubes.

People who believe in Wayne's American values and who admire his courageous fight must now fight the commercial bonanza that soon will sweep the nation.

Wayne once said he would like a simple Mexican saying for his epitaph: Feo, Fuerte y Formal - ugly, strong and dignified.

Real John Wayne supporters can make his epitaph come true. Resist the Graceland syndrome. Let the Duke rest in dignified peace.

Graduate tests destructive bagworms

Most people find bagworms to be destructive pests that live in their trees and therefore try to destroy them. However, Tech graduate student Barbara Rudd finds these worms an interesting area of research.

Bagworms are larval moths that construct and live in silk cases. These bagworms feed on foliage and can be very destructive in large numbers. Rudd's main objective is to test the effects of sub-lethal dosages of chemicals on the bagworms' ability to develop and reproduce.

She is using bagworms cleared from 28 juniper trees located behind the Tech library.

Bagworms are very prevalent in the Lubbock area, according to a spokesman for the entomology department. Almost everyone in this area with evergreen trees such as juniper or yew, will be plagued with this pest. The worms also may live in hardwood trees.

To eliminate bagworms, Rudd suggests spraying them with a recommended dosage of poison as soon as they begin to hatch. This year the hatching period, which depends on the temperature, occurred in Lubbock around May 5.

"The sooner you spray the better," Rudd said, "You may delay the spraying until about six weeks.

"At this point spraying is the only way to destroy bagworms, unless they are picked off by hand," she said.

Rudd's desire to open a tree consultant service inspired her to study bagworms.

When Rudd's research is complete, she will write a master's thesis on her findings.

She received her bachelor of science in entomology from Tech.

Colonel Taylor wouldn't put his brand on just any old Bourbon.

Introducing Old Taylor 101

He was a mighty demanding man, Colonel E. H. Taylor. A stickler in everything he did. His brand didn't go on anything but the best. Back in the 1870's and 80's the Taylor brand marked some of the finest purebred cattle ever seen in Woodford County, Kentucky. And the brand marked a very special kind of sour-mash Bourbon. Not just any old Bourbon. This was Old Taylor. An Old Taylor like today's 101. The kind of Bourbon Colonel Taylor liked to keep for himself and his special guests. Colonel Taylor's herd is scattered now. But his brand of Old Taylor lives on. A real sour mash for real enjoyment. A full 101 proof, for full flavor. Old Taylor 101. It's a brand that true Bourbon lovers are bound to take to.

Texxas 'cram' worthwhile

By CLAY WRIGHT
UD Managing Editor

It was billed as the Texxas Jam '79', but a more accurate description would have been the Texxas Cram. More than 82,250 music fans literally crammed the Cotton Bowl with the largest crowd in the stadium's history.

The crowd seemed well-behaved and only a few scattered incidents occurred. For the most part, the people were there for music, and music they got.

TKO opened the festival with a short set around 1:30 p.m. and was followed quickly by Sammy Hagar with another short set.

Hagar made full use of the stadium's echo effect by playing a particular note to travel across the stadium before following with the rest of a song.

Nazareth appeared after an hour-long stage charger. The group began to gear up the crowd with "Hair of the Dog" and Z Z Top's "Touche," the two songs that drew the most reaction from the crowd.

Van Halen followed Nazareth and the group's stage antics made it quite clear the band was at the festival to have fun. As David Lee Roth approached the stage, he stopped and leaned on a fork lift as if to say to the fans facing the side of the stage "I'll not forget you."

He kept his promise and left nearly the entire Cotton Bowl stadium's echo effect by playing a particular note to

"Jamie's Crying."

At the end of the nearly one — and — a — half — hour set, the fans just would not let go and demanded an encore.

The crowd then roared and stood as David Lee Roth leaped back onto the stage wearing a large cowboy hat. The group played again and then told the audience they loved it and Texas too. The crowd was the craziest group of people the band had ever seen, members said.

Right after that comment, a fan climbed to the top of a nearby speaker pole and tied a large Texas flag to it. The fan's action caused the group to return with one last song that was heavily cheered by the fans in the Bowl.

After nearly a two-hour break, Boston gave a typical performance. The group made full use of the darkening Cotton Bowl with lighting effects that at times actually lit up the entire stadium.

The highlight of the Boston set was an organ solo accompanied with cool blue lights and a fogged stage that set the atmosphere for a musical score with notes so low the stadium walls seemed to shake. Again the crowd wanted more and Boston returned with two encores.

Both encores were accompanied with fireworks. Near the end of the second encore a large fireworks sign over the stadium read "Thank You Texas From Boston."

Heart followed the Boston set with the most energized portion of the Jam. The group performed with technical accuracy that rivaled any of its albums. The highest point of the Heart set occurred when lead guitarist Nancy Wilson played a guitar solo leading into "Crazy on You" that produced a gigantic roar from the crowd. The entire set was accompanied by fireworks that seemed to explode on cue.

Blue Oyster Cult had the misfortune to follow the Heart set, and found the competition difficult.

The Texxas Jam proved to be an experience well worth the long lines, the inavailability of gasoline in Dallas and the $15 ticket cost. Only next year, the Jam should be held somewhere bigger, like the Grand Canyon.

But then it wouldn't be the Texxas Jam.

Valiants lose fizz

BY TOD ROBBESON
UD Reporter

Vince Vance and the Valiants are one of the few musical groups in America that improve by staying the same. The fear of stagnating or boring the audience too often drives performing groups to revise their repertoires toward more popular musical fads.

But sixties rock and roll is at its best when left unchanged, and the Valiants seemed to have mastered the ability to bring back sixties memories for their audience without cluttering its performance with mood-breaking modern tunes.

But the group's Thursday performance at Cold Water Country lacked the fizz that used to be the group's trademark. Maybe it was the small audience or the wrong atmosphere. Or maybe the Valiants felt it had stagnated, and thus needed more original tunes in the act.

The first set started characteristically slow, beginning with a few obscure oldies from the late fifties to warm up the audience. Then lead guitarist Buzzy Beano, aided by the intricately choreographed movements of keyboard player Andy Stone, singer "Professor Sid" and "The Hood," whipped into a series of legendary K-Tel greats like the Righteous Brothers' "You're My Soul," as well as several Chuck Berry hits.

Next, bassist Max Nova took control of the audience with Music Explosion's "Little Bit of Soul" and The Monkees' "Daydream Believer."

The rest of the set flowed through sixties hits from just about every major group, including the Beach Boys and the Beatles. A few originals by Buzzy Beano kept the show tight without breaking the nostalgic mood.

But the second set bombed after more than half of the audience left during a 45-minute break.

The Valiants group usually include in the second set a routine in which Andy Stone comes on stage dressed in a stars and stripes outfit and a Richard Nixon mask, complete with slightly modified "V" for victory hand gestures. But the group apparently decided to skip the routine, replacing it with more original songs, maybe in hopes of promoting a yet-to-be-released first album.

Unfortunately, the audience didn't respond to the original songs, so the Professor and Stone went off stage into a storage room emerging with mops and a broom for an impromptu stage-cleaning session. The audience didn't catch the joke that they were trying to clean up the act.

So, as a last resort, the Professor emerged once again from the storage room with a fire extinguisher, which he sprayed about the stage as the group continued playing.

But the dust from the extinguisher was so thick everyone started coughing. And thus ended what, hopefully, was the last Valiant effort at improving a show that normally would have needed no improvement.

Joe and Delbert: The pair are unbeatable

By INEZ RUSSELL
UD Reporter

With a beer in one hand and a guitar cradled in the other, Joe Ely waits. Then he throws his head back, flashes a grin, and sings. All that matters is being there, seeing him, and hearing the man sing.

Contrast that to Delbert McClinton. He stands simply, moves little, and never affects any superfluous stage gestures. His energy and concentration are directed toward one goal: making music. Which he does, with finesse and power.

Together, at the Rox Friday and Saturday night, the pair were unbeatable. Ely and McClinton may have played only a few songs as a duo, but that was the single flaw in their shows. Even minor sound problems Friday night during McClinton's set were irrelevant alongside the excellent music.

It was the kind of show whose spirit is almost impossible to recapture in words. It was the rock and roll, country and honky-tonk blues music that McClinton and Ely have perfected through years of touring.

Ely opened the show Friday night with "Cornbread Moon." He and his band performed effortlessly. The phrasing, the timing—everything—was perfectly orchestrated. In other words, the band was tight.

Through "Honky Tonk

Masquerade," "Down on the Drag" and "I Had My Hopes Up High," the band followed Ely's lead without question. The fusion of Lloyd Maine's steel guitar and Ponty Bone's accordion with the other instruments and Ely's distinctive singing and stage style made it easy to see why many consider Ely's band among the finest in the country.

Ely's infectious smile and enthusiasm were contagious. Even the usually sedentary Rox crowd got off its duff and onto the small crowded dance floor.

The crowd's dancing fervor increased when Delbert took the stage for one long set. He had none of the rambunctiousness or smiles of Ely. He simply sang.

When someone like Delbert sings the blues, people listen. By the end of the set, his shirt was sweat-stained, and he looked physically exhausted, yet exhilarated by his music. The crowd felt the same way.

Saturday night was even better. Only this time, Delbert opened the show. And somehow, he improved his performance of the previous night.

The blues are honest, stark music. An artist like Delbert plays them and lays all emotion bare.

He blazed through blues standards and newer tunes alike, stamping each with his personal touch. McClinton does not make a fuss on stage. There is no gesticulating or dancing. But one is struck by the visceral effect of his singing. Not to mention the haunting chords of his harmonica.

When McClinton had finished, I could see no way that Ely would even come close to McClinton's understated, yet driving power. He did.

Joe Ely seemed possessed Saturday night. For an hour and a half, he took a jam-packed crowd and transported it right back to the early days of rock and roll.

Ely may be a country singer on record. He may use a steel guitar and an accordion player on stage. But when he plays live, he plays rock and roll. The music to jitterbug to, absorb and feel throughout the body.

Perhaps the difference in Ely's set Saturday night was Smokey Joe Miller, Miller, a local saxophonist, added an extra tone to the music. Ely would mutter, "Blow some Smokey Joe," and the sax would come blazing through, always improvisational, always fresh, and definitely exciting.

But all of this excitement needed a climax. It came with Butch Hancock's "West Texas Waltz."

Ely strummed into the first words of the song, and the crowd reacted. Dancers sprang up and began moving to the music. Interjected into the song were solos by Miller and Maines.

Two drunk audience members even went up to help Joe sing. Together, they sang, repeating "La la la ... West Texas Waltz ..." over and over. Guitarist Jesse Taylor helped keep time by beating on a beer bottle. The spontaneity of the moment was unequalled.

But Joe didn't let it stop there. He and the band roared into "Fingernails," an old Jerry Lee Lewis song. The hard driving rock and roller was a perfect show-closer.

There was only one problem. The crowd wanted more.

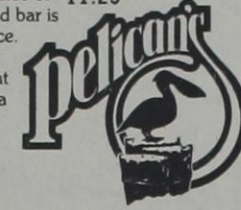

more. But it was 2 a.m., Joe Ely had played an hour and a half. He had given all he could. Combined with McClinton's riveting sets it was superb music. No crowd could ask for more.

Davis quits team over dispute

Doug Davis, Tech's number one singles tennis player last spring, Sunday quit the squad following a verbal brawl with new Radier recruit Mark

Thompson. Davis grew angry with Thompson while the two were competing in the semi-finals of the Texas Amateur Athletic Federation tennis championships. Tennis coach Mark Hamilton said the argument had been forming since the beginning of the match and apparently intensified when Davis protested a call that would have given Thompson victory in the second set. When Hamilton tried to intervene, the matter reached its boiling point.

"Both of the players were upset," Hamilton said, "and when I told them they should try to get along if they wanted to play on the same team together, Doug (Davis) exploded, said he was quitting the squad and walked off the court."

Hamilton said the incident was not the first time Davis has been involved in flare-ups with members of the Tech team. "Doug is a great player," Hamilton said, "but he has a win-at-all-costs attitude. He's been involved in several incidents this season, both in practice and in play." Hamilton said the loss of Davis will affect the Raider squad next season but that he is optimistic about the team's chances for improvement. "Losing Doug will have to hurt," Hamilton said. "But we have four or five good players for next season plus a couple of walk-ons. I still feel we will have a good team."

Duo vie in AIAW tourney

Tech will make its first appearance ever at the AIAW National Golf Championship today as Mary DeLong and Linda Hunt tee off with more than 160 of the country's top amateur women golfers at the Stillwater Country Club in Oklahoma. DeLong and Hunt were among 32 individuals qualifying for the tournament, based on their 10 lowest scores throughout the 1978-79 season. Thirty-two five-player teams, including two-time defending champion Miami, will vie for the team title.

The 72-hole tournament concludes Saturday. The field will be cut to the best-scoring 15 teams and individuals after Friday's third preliminary round. DeLong, a freshman from Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was the 10th best qualifier with an average of 77.7 for 10 rounds. She set a Tech record - low round of 74 this season at the Lamar Invitational. DeLong's best finishes were a fourth at the Sooner Invitational Golf Tournament and a ninth at the TAAW state golf tournament. Hunt, a sophomore from Olney, was the 29th person selected for the tournament. A transfer from Houston Baptist, Hunt was a member of the Huskies' state championship team in 1976 and played in the national tournament that year.

IM Sports forms bowling league

The Recreational Sports Department is offering a Co-Rec doubles bowling league for the first summer session. The deadline for entries has been extended until Friday at 4 p.m. The league will consist of teams of two men, two women and one man and one woman. An 80 percent handicap system will be used.

The bowling activity will take place at the Lubbock Bowling Club at 4020 Avenue Q. Fees will be $1 per game plus shoe rental. Entry deadlines for Spades and Frisbee Golf Singles are Friday. The deadline for Water Carnival and Racquetball Singles is June 20. Entries for Miniature Golf Singles are due June 22.
