Administration agrees in part to Iran terms

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Carter administration has agreed in principle to Iranian terms for freeing the 52 Americans held hostage in Iran for more than a year, Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie said Thursday.

But other U.S. officials indicated there is still disagreement over the details of the Iranian demands and they cautioned against expectations of imminent release. State Department spokesman John H. Trattner warned against "overexcite-

Muskie made his statement after a breakfast meeting with visiting West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich

"We've said publicly we accepted the four points in principle," Muskie said, referring to the terms set down Nov. 4 by the Iranian parliament. However, he added, "that doesn't tell you much about the details, does it?"

Muskie's remark apparently was the first by a senior Carter administration official that the Iranian terms fore release of the hostages were acceptable even in

Council approves ordinance

Garage apartments granted legal status

By PETE McNABB UD Staff Writer

All existing illegal garage apartments in Lubbock were granted legal status Thursday by the Lubbock City Council, but an ordinance was passed to prohibit future construction of similar rental properties.

The City Council approved on first reading an ordinance to grant "legal nonconforming use status" to owners of previously-illegal garage apartments, backyard houses, servants' quarters and single-family dwellings that have been converted into apartments. The ordinance must be voted on again by the Council at its first December meeting to be put into effect.

While the ordinance will be enforced city-wide, it was primarily targeted at the Overton and UNIT neighborhoods around the Tech campus.

Although the ordinance put a halt to the addition of more illegal rental properties, the move eventually could affect the price students pay for off-campus housing, the chairman of the Lubbock Board of Realtors told The University Daily.

"Many of these units are renting for $100 a month," said realtor board chairman Bill Stinson. "Without the addition of more of these structures, where are all these Tech students going to go? There aren't any lower priced housing units available (than the non-conforming rental properties).'

However, Stinson said he was in favor of the ordinance and said city officials "did a super job." The issue of what to do with the non-conforming property has been studied by the city for several years, but one of the final details of the ordinance was not brought up until minutes before the Council voted on the ordinance. The original ordinance discussed at a public hearing last week would have granted legal status only to those structures built or converted before December 1979 - when city officials began a widely-publicized discussion on how to halt further construction of illegal apartments in Lubbock. However, Councilwoman Joan Baker, in a last-minute amendment suggested to change the cut-off date to Thursday, thus making legal all existing property.

"It's my feeling that if we're going to forgive most of the people, we should forgive all of the people," Baker said.

The cut-off date had been a major point of debate in last week's public hearing. Some people had even suggested making the cut-off date 1975, when the city first began studying the issue. A few wanted to make the cut-off date 1941, when the city's first zoning ordinances were enacted.

Although there are no figures to support his claim, Stinson told the City Council last week that a December 1979 cut-off date would affect "about 10" residences. He said it would make sense to let those 10 residences be declared legal also.

However, Neale Pearson, a Tech political science professor who lives in one of the neighborhoods affected the most by the garage apartment issue, told The University Daily that more than 10 illegal properties have been constructed since December 1979. Pearson spoke favorably of the original proposal at last week's hearing.

"I'm unhappy with the changing of the cut-off date from 1979 to 1980," Pearson said. "It allows those who have converted illegally to get away with it."

Pearson also said Stinson was trying to protect some of the business handled by Stinson's business, Stinson Realtors. Stinson had suggested at the last hearing that the ordinance be made effective the date it is passed.

Stinson denied he handled any business in the neighborhoods surrounding Tech and said his only interest in the community was as the chairman of the Lubbock Board of He said Pearson was probably "just a typical emotional person talking off the top of

Another part of the ordinance that had previously met with some controversy was a registration process for the rental properties.

The original ordinance said all owners of the non-conforming property "must register" their property. The revised ordinance states the owners "may apply" for the legal status. Even those property owners who fail to apply for status at first will be given a chance to prove their property was existing before the ordinance was passed, if questions arise about when non-conforming properties were built.

The changes in the registration part of the ordinance came after complaints last week that the registration list seemed like a "hit list" of non-conforming apartment owners. "We're trying to make it as easy as possible to apply," said Councilman E. Jack Brown. "We've leaned over backwards to be fair in this instance."

Law school dean finalist on Tech campus today

By INEZ RUSSELL UD Staff Writer

The second of three finalists being considered for dean of the Tech Law School will be at Tech today to interview with administrators, Law School faculty and students.

Dale Furnish, a professor at Arizona State University College of Law, will be on campus today. Frank Newton, a professor at Baylor University School of Law, visited Tech Wednesday. Fletcher Baldwin Jr., a professor at the University of Florida's Spessard L. Holland Law Center, will be at Tech Dec. 3.

The dean search has been going on since former Dean Frank Elliott resigned in April. Law School Professor Richard Hemingway is serving as Interim Dean.

Newton is a graduate of Baylor, and has degrees from New York University and Columbia University.

Furnish graduated from Grinnell College, received his Doctor of Jurisprudence degree from The University of Iowa and has an additional degree from the University of Michigan. Baldwin received his bachelor's and

Doctor of Jurisprudence degrees from University of Georgia and has additional degrees from University of Illinois and Approximately 20 candidates were in contention for the dean position. The candidates were evaluated by a search committee, which selected the three finalists.

Tech President Lauro Cavazos will make the final selection.

Fee ceiling increase to be lobbied for

By JOEL BRANDENBERGER UD Staff Writer

Tech administrators will begin lobbying this spring to increase the ceiling of the University Center Fee, but no money will come out of student pocket books-yet.

Administrators will be asking for an increase of the University Center Fee from $10 to $20. Any actual increase will require a student vote.

Two officials in the Office of Student Life said the increased ceiling will be the first step toward the eventual increase of

"All we're trying to do right now is get some enabling legislation to increase the fee if we need it increased," Jack Baier, dean of students, said.

Even if the Legislature approves the ceiling increase, no actual increase can oc-

"Our discussions haven't gone that far yet, but I know we won't ask for a large increase," Ewalt said.

Ewalt said the increase would probably be "well below" the $20 ceiling. "The only reason we asked for the $20 ceiling was to avoid any fee problems in the long run," Ewalt said. "Now, if we feel the fee needs to be increased again, we don't have to go to the Legislature. We can take the increase directly to the students.'

A majority of the Student Senate voted Thursday to support a resolution calling for the $10 raise of the fee ceiling.

Some senators objected that voting to support an increase in the UC fee ceiling might suggest to the legislature that students would not mind an overall increase in their tuition payments.

However, Steve Scott, chairman of the Senate committee examining the UC ceiling hike, said an increase in the UC fee was necessary for the UC's continued operation, but there were ways other than a tuition increase to obtain funds.

The ceiling increase will probably not go into effect before Sept. 1, 1981, Baier said. However, Ewalt said there is a possibility the students could vote on a referendum before the Legislature gives final ap-

Majority of students rate UD fair to good in UC poll

The headline "Get Your Ass Out and Vote," the comic strip "Those Zany Stick Figures," and the Op-Ed page were all given favorable ratings.

About 58 percent of the respondents agreed with The UD's decision to publish the election day headline. Ninety-eight persons, or about 78 percent, said the Op-Ed page should be continued, and 71 respondents thought "Those Zany Stick Figures" is an entertaining and worthy part of the newspaper.

Some respondents chose not to vote on all the categories, said Dennis Garza, chairman of UC Programs' Ideas and Issues Com-

A total of 114 respondents, or 85 percent, said they read The UD every day. Fifty-five percent thought the newspaper publishes an appropriate balance of campus, local, state and national news. And 117 respondents said they prefer reading advance notices and briefs on upcoming events, rather than "afterthe-event" coverage.

In addition, 65 percent of the respondents said pictures published in the newspaper should relate more to the news

The fraternity system, the Student Association, alcohol on campus and tuition increases are among the campus issues and activities students said deserve more coverage. Tennis, track, lacrosse, soccer and intramurals are among the sports that deserve more attention than they are presently receiving, respondents said.

"A college newspaper must stimulate opinions and refresh ideas, especially on a campus where most people couldn't care less what happens in the world around them," said Keith Shank.

"The articles are written poorly, and the issues and news The UD chooses to cover are unworthy of attention. The coupons are the only justification for publication," said Paul Bennent." "It is as good as any other university paper," said Coleen

No trees grow in library room

Russell Baker

NEW YORK - Ever since reading about Clarkson College's plan to replace its library with a computer I have been worrying about what college students will do in the spring. I mean, you can't just haul a computer out on the campus and plunk it down under a budding elm and lie there with the thing on your chest while watching the birds at work, can you?

You can do that with a book, and it is one of the better things about going to college. With a computer, though, you've got to have a video terminal, which is basically a television set that rolls little, green, arthritic-looking letters and numbers across a dark screen.

It's not much fun reading a television screen, since, for one thing, the print has a terribly tortured look, as if it had spent four months in a Savak cellar, and since, for another, you always expect it to be interrupted by a commercial. Which is neither here nor there, of course, since this kind of reading is not supposed to convey pleasure, but information.

The difficulty is that you can't take your television screen out under the elm tree and plug it into the computer - the information bank or the information center or the information conveyor, or whatever they choose to call it - since (1) television screens are expensive and fragile and no college president in his right mind is going to let students expose them to ants, dew and tree sap, and since (2) colleges aren't going to shortchange the football team to pay for installing electrical outlets in the tree trunks.

What this means for college students of the future - and Clarkson's electronic library is the library of the future, make no mistake - what it means is that students are going to be spending their springs sitting alone in stale air staring at television screens.

Give them a six-pack of beer or a glass or bourbon, you might say, and you have the ideal training program for American adult home life, which, one supposes, they will still be expected to undertake once they leave college stuffed with information. All I can say is: What does this have to do with education?

The answer comes from Dr. Walter Grattidge, director of Clarkson's new Educational Resource Center - Clarkson's term, not mine. "Education," he told a New York Times reporter, "is basically an information-transfer process." At the risk of sounding somewhat snappish, I say, "Fie, Dr. Grattidge! Fie!"

"Information-transfer process" indeed. Education is not like a decal, to be slipped off a piece of stiff paper and pasted on the back of the skull. The point of education is to waken innocent minds to a suspicion of information.

An educated person is one who has learned that information almost always turns out to be at best incomplete and very often false, misleading, fictitious, mendacious - just dead wrong. Ask any seasoned cop or newspaper reporter. Ask anybody who has ever been the defendant in a misdemeanor trial or the subject of a story in a

Well, let's grant that Dr. Grattidge's opinion about being "basically an information-transfer process" is only 80 percent baloney. If you're going to learn the importance of mistrusting information, somebody first has to give you some information, and college is a place where people try to do this, if only so the professors can find out how gullible

Knowing that, they can then begin to try to teach you to ask a few questions before buying the Booklyn Bridge or the newest theory about the wherefore of the universe. I'm talking about the good professors now, not the ones who spend all their time compiling fresh information to be transferred to the book-buying public. Even the good professors, however, rarely have enough time to teach the whole student body the art of doubting, which leads to the astonishing act of thinking.

This is why so much of whatever educating happens at college happens in places like the grass under the elm where somebody has gone to read a book, just because it seems like a nicer place to read than the library, and becomes distracted by the shape of the clouds, or an ant on the elbow, or an impulse to say to the guy or the girl crossing the quadrangle, "Let's chuck the books for a while and get a beer."

If the time is autumn, and the campus has an apple tree, who knows? Maybe somebody half asleep in an informational-transference volume will look up, see an apple fall and revolutinize science. Not much chance of that happening if you're sitting in a room staring at a television screen plugged into the Educational Resources Center, is there?

In there you are just terribly alone, blotting up information from a machine which, while very, very smart in some ways, has never had an original thought in its life. And no trees grow, and no apples fall.

"CAN YOU BELIEVE IT? A LOUSY, STINKIN' ACTOR IN THE WHITE HOUSE!"

Reagan must fill administration

James Reston

(c) New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - In an interview with Time magazine, Ronald Reagan has explained how he will select the key members of his administration.

'My basic rule," he said, "is that I want people who don't want a job in government. I want people who are already so successful that they would regard a government job as a step down, not a step up."

He has a bit of an idea here, but he'd better be careful. Some of the most successful public officials in the history of this town, from Lincoln to Truman, were regarded as dubious characters if not downright failures before they got here.

Whereas some of the successful stars of private business - for example, Edward Stettinius, secretary of state under Truman, Treasury Secretary George Humphrey and Defense Secretary Charles Wilson under Eisenhower discovered that success in Detroit or Cleveland was no sure guide to success in Washington.

'Engine' Charlie Wilson was appealingly frank about the difference. As head of GM, he said, he had the power to hire, fire and reward. But in Washington, he complained, he didn't have authority to do much of anything without the approval of Congress.

"I don't want empire builders," Reagan told Time. "I want people who will be the first to tell me if their jobs are un-

I hope he finds them. No major Cabinet officer since the last World War except former Secretary of State Vance has resigned because he opposed policy and the division of authority within an administration. He didn't think his job. was unnecessary, but he thought he couldn't peform unless he had the president's confidence.

"Out there in the private sector," Reagan told Time, "there's an awful lot of brains and talent in people who haven't learned all the things you CAN'T do."

This is very true and a wise observation, but how do you find them? This is always a critical problem.

Shortly after the murder of President Kennedy, I spent a weekend with President Johnson at his ranch in Texas. He was preoccupied with two issues: how to staff his new administration and what to do about the budget he had to propose to the Congress within a few days.

It shows you how far the economy and the politics of this country have come since those days in January 1964 that Johnson was worried about bringing in a budget that would be over $100 billion. He insisted that we fly from his ranch to Gov. John Connally's house, and there, with the children all around, they decided no!

"One hundred billion was a big, fat, dangerous political figure,' they agreed, and Johnson should come in just below that mark - which he did.

On the way back to the ranch, Johnson talked about recruiting "good people" and confessed that though he had been in Washington for many years and knew a lot of people in the Capitol and Texas and the South, he really didn't know any talented young people who were coming up in the Middle West, or in California, or in New England or the Northwest. When he had to appoint judges, he said, he could count on the bar associations for help; but how could he find help to choose the best talent in the other states for the executive branch?

President-elect Reagan is in much the same position, but with an important difference. As a symbol of a conservative minority, he has won a spectacular victory because of a declining economy and an unpopular president, and now has to decide where he is going and who's going with him. For the next few weeks he will be under severe pressure from the conservative Republicans who stuck with him through his long journey to the White House.

And an argument could be made that he should go with them all the way and preside over their free enterprise policies at home and their hawkish challenges to the Soviet Union abroad.

But Reagan is being very careful. He is avoiding commitment to the extreme arguments and people he represented in the past. He is insisting on a bipartisan or nonpartisan foreign policy, while supporting his conservative allies on domestic policy, and calling for "Cabinet government" or collective leader-

Which brings the immediate question back to his decision on what kind of people will be on his staff and in his Cabinet, and to his philosophy about picking them. Most people who don't want a job in government? Who are so successful that they would regard a government job as a step down?

Reagan's best point about recruiting is his conviction that there are a lot of talented people out in the country who haven't learned all the things you CAN'T do. But there's no evidence so far that he has a system for finding the young people who are coming rather than the old pros of the Nixon era and his own generation who are going.

etters to the Editor Public Thank You

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Ex-Students Association here at Tech, I'd like to publicly thank Chino, Clay Wright, the advertising staff and all those with The University Daily who helped give us the excellent coverage in publicizing our Homecoming

The turnout at the Homecoming Dance Friday night, which featured the Maines Brothers, was a capacity crowd. Our barbecue lunch Saturday before the game was equally as well attended. We must attribute a great deal of the success of these two functions to the article by Clay about the Maines Brothers, the publicity during the week about Homecoming activities and the super placement of our ads for the dance.

It is the type of cooperation and responsibility to the entire university community that sets an average student newspaper apart from a really good campus paper!

Thanks again to you all.

Lack of publicity?

To the Editor: After this past weekend Texas Tech, 5-4 records. And guess which is the only one of the three planning to have a nice relaxing Christmas watching their compadres suffer through another physically exhausting bowl game? If you don't know, it is Texas Tech. Even the most casual football observer

Arkansas and Houston all have identical would agree one reason Houston and Arkansas got bowl bids is because they are "Big Name" schools. I feel there are two necessary components for building such a reputation. First, the team must have a winning tradition. And second, someone must publicize the school. Texas Tech appeared in more bowl games in the 1970s than any other team in the Southwest Conference. except for Texas. So the winning tradition is obviously there. Therefore, Tech's problem must be their lack of publicity. I have grown up in a city which hosts a bowl game every year and have personally known several people on their bowl selection committee. It is obvious from talking to them that for a school with a slightly above average record to be invited to a bowl game, the school must sell itself to the bowl selection committee.

Apparently, this job is not being accomplished at Texas Tech. It is a situation very similar to a person graduating from college, very few companies actually come knocking on your door offering you a job. The college senior must sell himself to the company in order to receive a job

With the appointment in the past week of John Conley to the Athletic Director's job, I feel he should carefully review the job that Joe Hornaday and Keith Samples have done in promoting Texas Tech football. Their jobs as Sports Information Director (SID) and ex-SID, respectively, is a crucial one for the overall success of the athletic department.

One of their main projects has been "Red Raider Rampage," and I know very few people who actually know what it is (it's not a magazine). Unless someone can start selling Texas Tech football a little better in the future, Texas Tech can expect to continue sitting home wathcing teams with identical marginal records play in bowl games. Good luck Arkansas and Houston in your bowl games, Tech will be sitting home pulling for you because of our inefficient SID department. Hopefully, Tech will be at least 9-2 next year so they won't have to rely on their SID.

SA external vice president

Williams balances responsibilities

By KIM LEMONS UD Staff Writer

Books line his office walls and various papers; his appointment calendar and a picture of his wife are precisely arranged on his desk. The calendar, positioned behind his vice presidental nameplate, lists five meetings between 1:30 and 5:45 p.m., and another at 7 p.m., meaning he'll be home for dinner later than usual.

The office could seemingly belong to any 40-year-old, balding, chain-smoking executive. But the office's occupant is a tall, thin engineering major, who daily balances 12 hours of classes with marriage and his position as external vice president of Tech's Student Association. Despite the pressures, Jeff responsibilities. Williams wouldn't change anything in his present situation, including his job responsibilities, his major, or his decision to get married when many of his friends probably still are cruising the local bars on Saturday night.

Women determine relations

NEW YORK (AP) - The business world may be in flux as far as women are concerned, but one constant remains, according to a New York City executive recruiter and career counselor.

In today's weight-conscience world, a body-perfect program that records food consumption by using a miniature citizen's band radio attached to the ear may sound like just another gimmick. Some people might even object to having every bite they take recorded, written down and studied by trained professionals.

A test group of steers on Tech's agriculture department farm at New Deal experiences just this kind of scrutiny every time they head for a meal. But the steers do not seem to mind, Tech Animal Science Professor Robert Long said. These progressive steers are watching their weight in the name of animal research.

Long is currently conducting research to help feedlots produce better quality cattle. His study is based on the theory that sorting and feeding cattle according to their frame size produces higher

Long said when cattle of the same age are compared, their frame size has probably increased according to genetic potential and is a good measure of what their mature frame size will be. If a steer has a large frame when it is young, its frame will probably be large when it reaches maturity. The larger the steer's frame, the longer it will take to reach maturity.

That's where the CB comes in. A miniature CB is attached to one ear of each of 30 steers. Each CB has its own frequency that identifies the individual steer. The animals are fed on self-feeders that offer large quantities of food and allow the steers to eat as much as they want, whenever they want.

The steers are divided into three groups, according to frame size: small, medium and large. When a hungry steer beats a path for the feed, he breaks a light beam in the feeder, activating a machine, which, by way of the steer's CB frequency, records which steer eats how much. This information tells Long the length of time a steer needs to be fed to reach its optimum slaughter weight. Long said if cattle the same age and same skeletal frame size are fed for the same amount of time, they will be ready for market at the same time. He said if cattle with different frame sizes are fed together, there is no way to market them at the same time without feeding some too long or others not long enough. This results in a loss of potential profit. Feeding cattle according to frame size eliminates overfeeding of small cattle and under-feeding of large cattle. "If you get them fatter than they need to be, their efficiency goes down and it costs more money," Long said.

Long said large cattle were previously thought by the cattle industry to be the best cattle; however, cattle of all frame sizes can be just as efficient if they are fed according to their frame size.

Long joined Tech's animal science staff in 1976. He is in charge of beef cattle programs and teaching.

Student composer engineers fascinating sound for 'Wings' stroke victim.

Tonight's opening of Arthur Kopit's Wings at the University Theatre marks the culmination of almost a full year's work for Steve Paxton, sound engineer. Because of the unusual importance of sound in Wings, I decided to interview Paxtonhowever, I was hardly prepared for what was to follow.

As I greeted Paxton at the University Theatre, which lately has become his second home, Paxton suggested that I listen to a portion of the tape he has painstakingly composed and engineered as his doctor's dissertation in Fine Arts. As he disap> peared into the upper reaches of the auditorium, I settled myself squarely in the middle of the seating area. I noted the presence of huge speakers at each of the four corners of the auditorium.

> And then the tape started. What followed is difficult to describe. First a clock ticking, then skipping a beat, then ticking some more. Behind me, I heard some disturbing little noises that I could not identify. Then a woman's voice, distorted. Wind started to blow, first to the left, then to the right, behind and in front, above and below me. The woman's voice again, louder but speaking nonsense. Suddenly an ambulance siren, cars, loud, rhythmic breathing coming from all sides of the theater. Then a loud, grinding, crashing noise, followed by a crystal silence. Birds started to chirp. I could hear faint bells playing a pleasing melody, then fading. I sat there, transfixed, until I was interrupted by Paxton, who had shut off the tape and was standing beside me...

"I started working on this project just about a year ago," said Paxton. "When I started my dissertation, I first thought I wanted to write an opera. I was looking for a libretto, but I couldn't find anything that I wanted to set to music. Then someone showed me the script for Wings, and I knew the show would obviously be ludicrous if I set the words to music, but I liked the idea of composing the music to go along with the script.

"I had written most of the music for the show when I talked to Mr. Schulz (Professor Schulz is directing the University Theatre production). He had been interested in doing the show several years ago, but couldn't fit it in the schedule at that time.'

With Schulz's help, however, the show was scheduled for a main stage production in the fall 1980 season. Wings was written by Arthur Kopit as a sense of obligation to his father, who suffered a major stroke and died just before Kopit finished the play. Wings traces the recovery of a woman, Emily Stilson, as she deals with a language disorder called aphasia, the result of a sudden stroke. The title of the play is

"In many ways," said Paxton, "aphasia is similar to wingwalking-the sense of disorientation, the fear of death and yet a certain thrill of experiencing the sensations.'

significant in that, in her youth, Emily had been an aviatrix and Paxton read quite a bit about aphasia in preparation for this project. Paxton said, "I wanted to create for the audience the sense of Mrs. Stilson's aphasia, her memory pulsing in and out. I had to avoid being too clinical in detail, though. If it was too specific, the music and sounds wouldn't be theatrical. I tried to create moods the audience could relate to. Some of it is just pretty music, notes that sound good together.'

In order to re-create the disorientation of the aphasic mind, Paxton is using 30 speakers placed throughout the theater to reproduce the space distortion characteristic of aphasia. "I'm using 30 speakers on six separate channels; a large speaker in each corner of the auditorium, 13 speakers above and 13 speakers below the audience," Paxton said. As he spoke, I noticed the small speakers placed strategically throughout the theater, many located under the audience seats.

"All of the sound effects in the show are either natural or synthesized. I went out and recorded the sounds of a hospital, the wind in trees, cars, etc. The rest I synthesized with an Arp 2600 synthesizer," Paxton said. "The music includes saxaphone, clarinet, five octaves of bells and the synthesizer.

Paxton was enthusiastic about his experience with Wings. It is one of the first times he has worked in the theater. Paxton said, "The lighting and set design for the show were designed with the sound and music in mind. I'm not accustomed to seeing such an integration of design. When things click just right, it's

"In the future, I would like to spend a whole lot of time writing music for the theater. I'll probably end up with a job in college teaching composition," Paxton said. "But an interesting alternative would be to get a job working with some kind of regional theater. Then I would have the problem of a professional - I would end up writing mostly pre-show and scene change music, which can get very boring. If I'm going to write music, I want someone to listen to it.'

Regardless of what the future holds, people will definitely be listening to Paxton's fascinating music-sound collage in Wings. The show will run at 8:15 tonight through Tuesday at the University Theatre, before it moves on to San Angelo as Tech's entry in the American College Theater Festival. In TV's 'Dallas': Who shot J.R.

By PAT BARTON UD Staff Writer

Nov. 21, 1980. Nov. 22, 1963. Two memorable shootings and a wondering world waiting to learn the identity of the assailant.

the day after America learned who shot John F. Kennedy we will all learn the truth about who shot J.R. Both men were rich, young and ambitious, both had beautiful young wives, both had brothers named Bobby, and both were shot in Dallas.

Although some chance coincidences exist, there are, of course vast differences between the two. In the real world it took only one day to capture JFK's assailant, but CBS has been able to keep its viewers in blissful suspense for almost seven months. Seven months of profitable commercial hype have kept Dallas atop television's ratings.

No one can say if CBS cleverly planned these coincidences. Lee Harvey Oswald is not among the many suspects in the J.R. shooting, but tonight the world will find out which Dallas character is the culprit in the most famous shooting in Dallas

From the time Dallas ended its season last year with ol' J.R. catching some lead in the gut, everyone from Johnny Carson to Pope John Paul II has been speculating about who pulled that trigger. Polls have been taken, rumors have been rampant and more suspects have appeared than the series has

J.R. personally ruined Cliff's political career and succeeded in proving Sue Ellen's baby was not Cliff's handiwork. To list all of Cliff's motives would take more ink than the complete works of Poe; suffice it to say Cliff is a hot prospect.

*Miss Ellie - J.R.'s mother. She almost cracked out of her usual comatose state and showed some emotion when J.R. used her beloved ranch Southfork as collateral for a near-disaster of an oil deal. Miss Ellie has sat back and watched J.R. perform acts of treachery worthy of J. Edgar Hoover, never twitching an eyelash in protest. Raiders actually doing better than expected

For sale: one "Dump Dockery" shirt.

Price: cheap - dirt cheap.

The noses on everyone's faces are like the opinions on the job status of Tech football coach Rex Dockery. Everybody has one.

There is a piece of cardboard in the library that scrawled on it says: "Fire Rex Dockery now." Somebody wrote underneath that "We beat Texas, 24-20, didn't we". That was followed by "Miracles do happen."

Jon Mark Beilue

Feelings are indeed mixed on the performance of Dockery. Fire him, some say. Get off his back, others yell. For what it's worth, here is another coal to throw in the proverbial fire: Rex Dockery should remain as coach of the Texas Tech Red Raiders. And he should keep that position until his coaching performance war-

GRAND OPENING

It doesn't take a sleuth to know there are many who want Dockery's scalp. Everybody wants a winner. Winning is the bottom line. When fans pay their money to see a Tech team lose to Baylor, TCU, or A&M, they have a right to boo. I, too, have done my share of catcalling. It's frustration.

You can bet that every time Wes Hightower or Freddie Wells hits the middle of the line for a two-yard gain, fans follow with a number of expletive deletives that has the name Dockery wrapped around them.

"Dump Dockery" T-shirts have been on sale by a couple of disgruntled and enterprising Tech students. They are out to make a buck, sure, but they are also expressing their feelings.

But every coin has two sides. Rex Dockery didn't fumble umpteen times against the Aggies. Rex Dockery wasn't on the offensive line against Baylor. Rex Dockery didn't play on defense against TCU in the ill-fated fourth quarter.

It's amazing how someone can go from SWC Coach-of-the-Year in 1978 to a bumbling boob in 1980. Yet he's coaching the same way he did two years ago as he did last year and this year.

We tend to forget that Tech was ranked no better than seventh in the SWC before the season began. The outlook called for no more than four wins. Yet Tech has already captured five victories with two games still to play.

Many are yelling for Dockery's job and moaning because Tech did not get a bowl bid all in the same breath. There is a paradox in there somewhere.

The Raider material is often overrated. Tech has its share of fine quality athletes but when compared with the recruiting haul

Still Tech defeated Texas and SMU and came within a fumbled pitchout of defeating North Carolina. Dockery said his assistants did an excellent job in preparing for Texas. Although he would never admit it, you can bet the farm Dockery was also very much responsible for having his squad prepared for the Longhorns - and SMU, too.

I remember on his show following the Texas win Dockery praised his staff for plays that worked and then took complete blame for calling a pass play that failed. Here was a chance for Dockery to blow his own horn under mounting pressure, yet he gave the credit to his assistants. Class.

'Coach Dockery is very loyal. He sticks up for his players and coaches," former Tech guard Larry Martin said. "That is one trait in him that I respect.

"I've never seen a coach go into a film room and pick apart a defense like he can," Martin said. "He can find a team's strengths and weaknesses and how to attack that team in a matter of minutes."

Martin said that the strongest part of Dockery is his optimism. "He's the most optimistic person I've ever been around. When things are gloomy, he instills optimism in his players. He's unbelievable in that respect.

"It upsets me to hear people gripe who have never been involved," Martin said. "I know they have a right to gripe but they don't really know what is going on. They see the little things and don't get the complete picture.'

Rex Dockery has his faults. He comes across to the media and the public like a limp dishrag. His image is not one of charisma ala Steve Sloan or Lou Holtz. This does not provoke massive support for Tech as attendance figures indicate. Yet Dockery is not auditioning for The Tonight Show.

There are coaches better than Dockery but there are also coaches that are a lot worse. And Dockery, unlike other Tech mentors, is not using Tech for a stepping stone to other univer-

The Tech men's swimming and diving team will be in the Dallas-Fort Worth area today and Saturday for meets against SMU and TCU. The meets are Tech's first competition since a season opening loss two weeks ago to Houston. The tankers will meet SMU at 7:30 p.m. today in Dallas. Tech will challenge TCU at 1 p.m. Saturday in Fort Worth. Tech coach Ron Holihan expects an exciting meet from his swimmers against SMU.

"Our meet with SMU last year went down to the final relay," Holihan said. "We always swim well against SMU, and this year should be no exception." Freshman Rick Scott should lead the way for the Raiders in the backstroke and the medley relay. Juniors Sid Glenn and Richie O'Neill also are expected to score points for Tech. Glenn was an All-Southwest Conference selection in the distance freestyle a year ago. O'Neill was a national qualifier in the one-meter and three-meter diving events. Other swimmers competing for Tech are freshmen Jeff Beth, Fred Creamer, Robin Edmond, Danny Herring, Guy McLaren and Morgan Wise; sophomores David Jezek, Tom Who's arguing?

It looked more like a lynch mob, not a sports staff. "What are you trying to do to us, Beilue?" yelled Mike

"You're out of your mind, jerk," huffed Mike Keeney. "Thanks," said a sarcastic Jeff Rembert. And then he mumbled something under his breath. All this anger because I got a couple of witches to be guest forecasters. You know, "Bubble, bubble, toil and trouble...

Louise and Loy Stone are from the Church of Wicca. Well, I have nothing against witches - I still watch The Wizard of Oz. But these sticks in the mud called sports writers were upset because they thought my Wicca friends had an unfair advan-

That's the catch. Lou and Loy can predict the future, or so they say. Personally I don't care if L&L can see things before they happen. More power to them. But my guys tend to take this forecasting business pretty seriously and, to say the least,

"They get to use an eye of Newt and all I can use is a faded Street and Smith football magazine," Keeney pouted. "Besides they get to go skyclad.

The Stones pray in "skyclad". That means clad in nothing, the buff, the raw, birthday suit, el nudo. But if they want to get skyclad with Bill Yeoman, that's their business.

Speaking of witches, did Sue Ellen shoot J.R? Christin? Miss Ellie? Cliff Barnes? Vaughn Leland? We'll soon know.

I think the long-shot Dr. Bellows shot J. R. Look at the facts: Bellows despised Major Nelson throughout most of the old I Dream of Jeannie sitcom - he almost drove Bellows crazy; Hayden Roarke's (Bellows) career since the show has gone nowhere while Larry Hagman's career has prospered, and, finally, in a little known episode of Dallas, J.R. sold Bellows some non-existent space shuttles.

McAllister said he shot J.R. (he has a point), Keeney said it's Miss Ellie, and Rembert goes with ole Vaughn Leland.

And Louise and Loy? They said the Wicca group is laying 5-1 odds on Dorothy. You wanna argue with them?

Wright's gained 258 yards on 61 carries and scored two touchdowns this season. He gained a season-high 104 yards during Houston's 37-5 win against TCU.

Supporting the Houston running attack, which is ranked second in the conference, is a passing attack that features two experienced receivers - flanker Eric Herring and split end Lonell Phea.

Phea, a one-year letterman, is fourth in the conference in pass receptions with 29. He's gained 533 yards and scored two touchdowns. Herring has caught 16 passes for 265 yards.

The Coogs offensive line will be tight end Hubert Miller (five receptions, two TDs); tackles Robert Jones (6-1, 260 pounds) and Maceo Fifer (6-41/2, 274); guards Jack Faniel (6-0, 256) and Bobby Grimes (6-3, 240) and center Randy Swisher (6-0, 234).

Tech's offensive will feature one of the conference's best Ron Reeves and split end Renie

Reeves is fifth in the conference in passing with 113.5 yards a game. He's thrown for 1099 yards and eight touchdowns. Last week against SMU, Reeves completed 12 of 20 passes for 143 yards and one touchdown.

He's already surpassed Tom Wilson's Tech record for career passing yardage and needs one more touchdown pass to establish a new mark in that category. He has thrown 23 TD passes during his Tech career. Baker is the SWC's second
