Freshman tries to flee Tech police

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

A Texas Tech student was arrested by university police Monday after he attempted to flee from officers, Tech's Department of Police Services reported.

Brian Hajovsky, an 18-year-old freshman arts and sciences major from Fort Worth, was arrested at 1 p.m. Monday after he ran from officers who attempted to stop him for a traffic violation, police said.

Hajovsky drove his Honda motorcycle around the traffic barricade at Seventh Street and Canton Avenue, according to police reports, and officers tried to stop Hajovsky by flashing their lights.

Police said Hajovsky turned south on Flint Avenue and then turned right in the C-5 commuter parking lot, located west of Lubbock Municipal Coliseum. He looked over his shoulder at the officer following him and accelerated rapidly toward the north side of the parking lot, police said.

Hajovsky continued through the parking lot until he came to a break in the fence along the Brownfield Highway, where he turned through the opening and drove west along the median, police reported.

Officers continued to pursue Hajovsky as he turned toward the Gaston Hall apartments, police reports said. Hajovsky then ran on foot south along the western side of the C-5 commuter parking lot, police said.

One officer ran on foot after Hajovsky while another officer called on the public address system from his police unit for Hajovsky to halt, police said.

Hajovsky was stopped when an officer grabbed his arm, causing them both to fall to the ground, police said.

Hajovsky was arrested and transported to the Lubbock County Jail, where he was charged with evading arrest, disregard of a barricade, no license and no motorcycle endorsement. Fines for the traffic violations total $310, police said.

Texas Tech sophomore Laura Fell, an elementary education major from Hurst, enjoys the January sunshine with two students in Tech's child development class. Three-year-old Brittany and 2-year-old Kate are part of the university's child development research program, which provides day care service for infants, toddlers and preschoolers.

Committee proposes adding religion minor

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

An interdisciplinary minor in religious studies in the College of Arts and Sciences will be the most likely option for the university to take in providing religious studies on campus, Executive Vice President/Provost Donald Haragan said Monday.

The interdisciplinary minor was one of four recommendations made by an ad hoc committee on religious studies, he said.

A couple of years ago, students were receiving credit for courses taught by people who were hired by churches instead of the university, he said.

A 1987 attorney general's opinion indicated that giving credit for courses not taught by university faculty members was in violation of the establishment clause of the First Amendment — separation of church and state. Tech and other state universities eliminated religious courses offered for credit.

Haragan said the people who taught the courses — such as those at the Wesley Foundation and the Baptist Student Union — served as campus ministers and still do. Students can take classes from the organizations but do not receive university academic credit.

A petition signed by approximately 500 faculty, staff and students urging administrators to reinstate the academic study of the Bible and religion was presented Nov. 15 to Interim President Elizabeth Haley, Tech regents J. Fred Bucy and Wesley Masters, Student Association President Shayne Woodard and The University Daily.

An ad hoc committee on religious studies, formed to study the issue in fall 1987, made the following four recommendations to Haragan:

- To establish a full-fledged department of religion with faculty qualified in the academic study of religion hired by the university.
  - A proposed major in the history of religion to be offered by the department of history, with related courses from other disciplines being counted toward the major.
  - The development of a minor in religion with a faculty member qualified in the academic field of religion being hired to teach courses in religion and to supervise disciplines that have religious content.
  - The development of an interdisciplinary minor with a title such as "Comparative Studies of Religion."
- The committee reported that a department of religion should be the university's goal.

Haragan said although no public university in the state has a department of religion, the formation of such a department should be considered by Tech in the future. He said Tech's current financial status does not permit hiring the personnel that would be needed to staff an entire department.

The ad hoc committee also indicated that a major in the history of religion would provide the opportunity to offer religious studies as a recognized discipline without danger of deceiving students or other institutions that the discipline of religion was being taught. The proposed major has not been fully developed by the history department.

The committee raised two questions in reference to a proposed minor in religion with a qualified faculty member as a chairman. What department would the faculty member be in, and would it be appropriate to use funds in this way rather than another?

An interdisciplinary minor — the minor Haragan said is realistically probable — would involve existing courses in anthropology, arts, classics, English, history, philosophy, political science and sociology. An interdisciplinary minor would not cost the university any additional funds and would follow the organization of established interdisciplinary minors.

"That's probably the option we're going to take," he said. "We'll see what courses we can package in an interdisciplinary minor in religious studies."

He said the classes in the minor would not focus on denominations but on the effects religion has on mankind in society.

He said the courses might use the Bible or other documents as teaching materials in the courses.

Otto Nelson, associate dean of arts and sciences, who was the head of the ad hoc committee on religious studies, said courses that might be included in the minor are history of Christianity, the Crusades, history of world religions, history of religions in America, religion and society, religion and politics, philosophy of religions and religion in literature.

"I think it's tailor-made for Tech," Nelson said. "I think such a program at Tech would be very successful."

Haragan said the minor could be put together quickly.

"I would say at the soonest by next September and the latest by the beginning of the next calendar year," he said.

Ashworth says minorities sure to fare poorly in test

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth said Monday a test of college freshmen will show that minorities are less prepared to do college work than whites.

Ashworth said lower scores for minorities will show that many are going through inferior educational systems.

"We know it's going to be one of the major criticisms of the test," Ashworth said, and he said a lawsuit is expected. He said the prediction is based on other states' experiences and results of other tests administered in Texas.

"My observation would be this, that if the test were given and all ethnic groups scored exactly the same on it, we would have to say there was something wrong with the test," Ashworth said.

"I think there are going to be accountability questions raised by the Legislature, as there already are," he said. "I think it may make a better case for equitable funding" for school districts.

Ashworth added that testing coupled with remedial courses will allow the state to improve the skills of students with deficiencies.

"The standards will not be lowered to meet the student, but the student will be raised to meet the expected standard," he said.

The Texas Academic Skills Program test was mandated by the 1987 Legislature and will be given for the first time in March. It includes sections on reading, mathematics and writing.

The first administration of the test will serve as a substitute for the test formerly given only to education majors, but any eligible student can take it.

The test is required for freshmen and transfer students entering Texas public colleges beginning in fall 1989. Students are exempt from taking it if they have earned at least three semester credit hours of college-level work before then.

The test can't be used to keep a student from being admitted, Ashworth said, but a student must pass it to take upper-division courses. Students who fail a section of the test could need several semesters of non-credit, remedial courses in that area.

In fall 1990, the full entering class of freshmen will be taking the test, estimated at more than 100,000 students.

"The test alone is less than half of what we need to do," Ashworth said. "If the state of Texas were to do nothing but give the test and not provide the remedial help, then all we would be doing is identifying for the rest of the nation to ridicule how poorly prepared our students are."

Anti-abortionists rally in Dallas

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Thousands of anti-abortion protesters rallied Monday at Dallas City Hall and marched to the Federal Courthouse to place a black wreath where the precedent-setting Roe vs. Wade lawsuit was filed almost 19 years ago.

"Because this is where it started, we in Dallas have the responsibility for stopping this," said Bill Price, president of Dallas Right to Life, who led the rally of almost 3,000 demonstrators. "The abortion issue will be won at the ballot box. Look around you. It is an issue we won and they lost."

Over the weekend, anti-abortionist forces nationwide have been marking the 16th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling on Roe vs. Wade, which set the precedent for a woman's right to legal abortion, with protest rallies. The case, filed March 3, 1970, on behalf of Norma McCorvey — known in the case as Jane Roe — challenged a 19th-century Texas law banning abortion except to save the life of the mother.

The nation's high court ruled 7-2 for McCorvey on Jan. 22, 1973, and said she and others have a right "to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child."

But Price said anti-abortion interests have helped turn the public tide on the issue and predicted that the Supreme Court would overturn the ruling within the next year.

"We're on the verge of a miracle," Price said. "We are on the verge of making history ... After 16 long years, the Supreme Court has finally agreed to reconsider the Roe vs. Wade decision."

The Rev. Edward Robinson, pro-life coordinator of the Catholic Diocese of Dallas, said his prayers for the group, calling Roe vs. Wade "a

Protesters demand action

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush Monday called abortion "our American tragedy" as almost 70,000 protesters marked the anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark decision legalizing abortion. The march organizer said the new administration should "provide actions to carry out their words."

Bush, speaking by telephone hook-up to the activists, said the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision "was wrong and should be overturned."

"I wanted to share with you my deep personal concern about our American tragedy: abortion on demand," Bush said over loudspeakers. "I think America needs a human life amendment, and I think when it comes to abortion, there's a better way — the way of adoption, the way of life."

But Nellie Gray of the March for Life, which organized the annual cruel and unjust decision by our Supreme Court."

"I am optimistic," said Wayne House, an instructor at the Dallas Theological Seminary. "Certainly a lot still remains to be done, but we are carrying the light of freedom for the pre-born children of this nation."

"Today is our day to celebrate life," House said. "It is also our day to mourn for the dead." He noted more than 23 million babies have been aborted since the Roe vs. Wade ruling. But House and the others believe the anti-abortion movement has gained momentum.

"The world's greatest holocaust is now beginning to stop," Price said to cheering throngs, many of whom protest, told the crowd Bush could not hear their applause because the White House communications office had installed a one-way communications line.

Gray said that at a meeting earlier in the day with Dan Quayle, she and other anti-abortion leaders told the vice president, "We will not be talked to, and not (have) him listen to us."

She said they told Quayle and other administration officials that "they need to provide actions to carry out their words."

Advocates of the right to abortion attacked Bush's comments.

"Make no mistake about it: President Bush wants to drag American women back to a time when they risked mutilation, humiliation and even death in order to take the most basic control of their own lives," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

came with strollers packed with infants and bundled-up toddlers.

Eight-year-old Danny Saindon was dressed in his Cub Scout uniform as he walked with his dog, Bubbles, along the route. "I'm here so that babies won't be killed," he explained, saying he had been to other pro-life rallies. "Our dog's pregnant, too."

Mark Wilkins of Mansfield tromped down the street in a leg cast alongside his wife, Christie. "This is the first time I've ever attended anything like this, but I believe that abortion is murder and I'm trying to do what I can to stop the American holocaust," he said. "The issue is not women's rights, but human rights."

Proposition 42

Opponents of NCAA measure may forget niche of academics

Jeff Parker
Sports Writer

John Thompson is back, but he's still worried about being on the short side of a 163-154 margin.

No, his Georgetown Hoyas were not upset by high-scoring Loyola Marymount, but the National Collegiate Athletic Association convention this month decided by the nine-vote margin to get tougher with academic restrictions to be imposed on collegiate athletes.

The convention met in San Francisco and beefed up Proposition 48 with a new measure — termed Proposition 42 — set on stopping the flow of scholarship money (defined as monetary assistance granted to a "scholar") to athletes who do not meet the Proposition 48 requirements.

The 1983 passage of NCAA Bylaw 5-1-(j), otherwise known as Proposition 48, requires freshman athletes entering college since 1986 to obtain either a minimum score of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), a composite of 15 on the American College Testing Program exam (ACT) or graduate from high school with a 2.0 GPA in a selected core curriculum.

If the student enters the college program without achieving one of the three qualifying standards, he or she loses a year of athletic eligibility while enrolling in the school as an everyday student, not being able to participate in NCAA events without maintaining a moderate — at least — GPA.

Sounds pretty straight, right?

Not necessarily. Schools found a so-called loophole that allowed recruited athletes to be eligible for monetary aid while sitting out their first season.

So in comes brand-new Proposition 42, which would stop any scholarship payment to students who do not meet one of the three Proposition 48 requirements.

This is what John Thompson is upset about. So upset that he walked out of one and did not attend another of two Hoya games last week to make the topic "more publicized." Please note that these games were against Boston College and Providence, nowhere near the quality of team that Georgetown faced this weekend in Big East rival Connecticut when Thompson made his reappearance on the Hoya bench.

Thompson said in the Jan. 23 issue of Sports Illustrated that the rule will hurt the "economically deprived athletes" by forcing them to pay for the four-year institution while sitting out their freshman season.

Proposition 42 does not force athletes to pay for Georgetown University or any other private institution. Why would the athlete choose to go to a school that costs more than $15,000 without a scholarship?

Academic scholarship recipients work under much the same guidelines.

Athletes who do not even meet the entry requirements of the school are receiving scholarships to go there and play college sports.

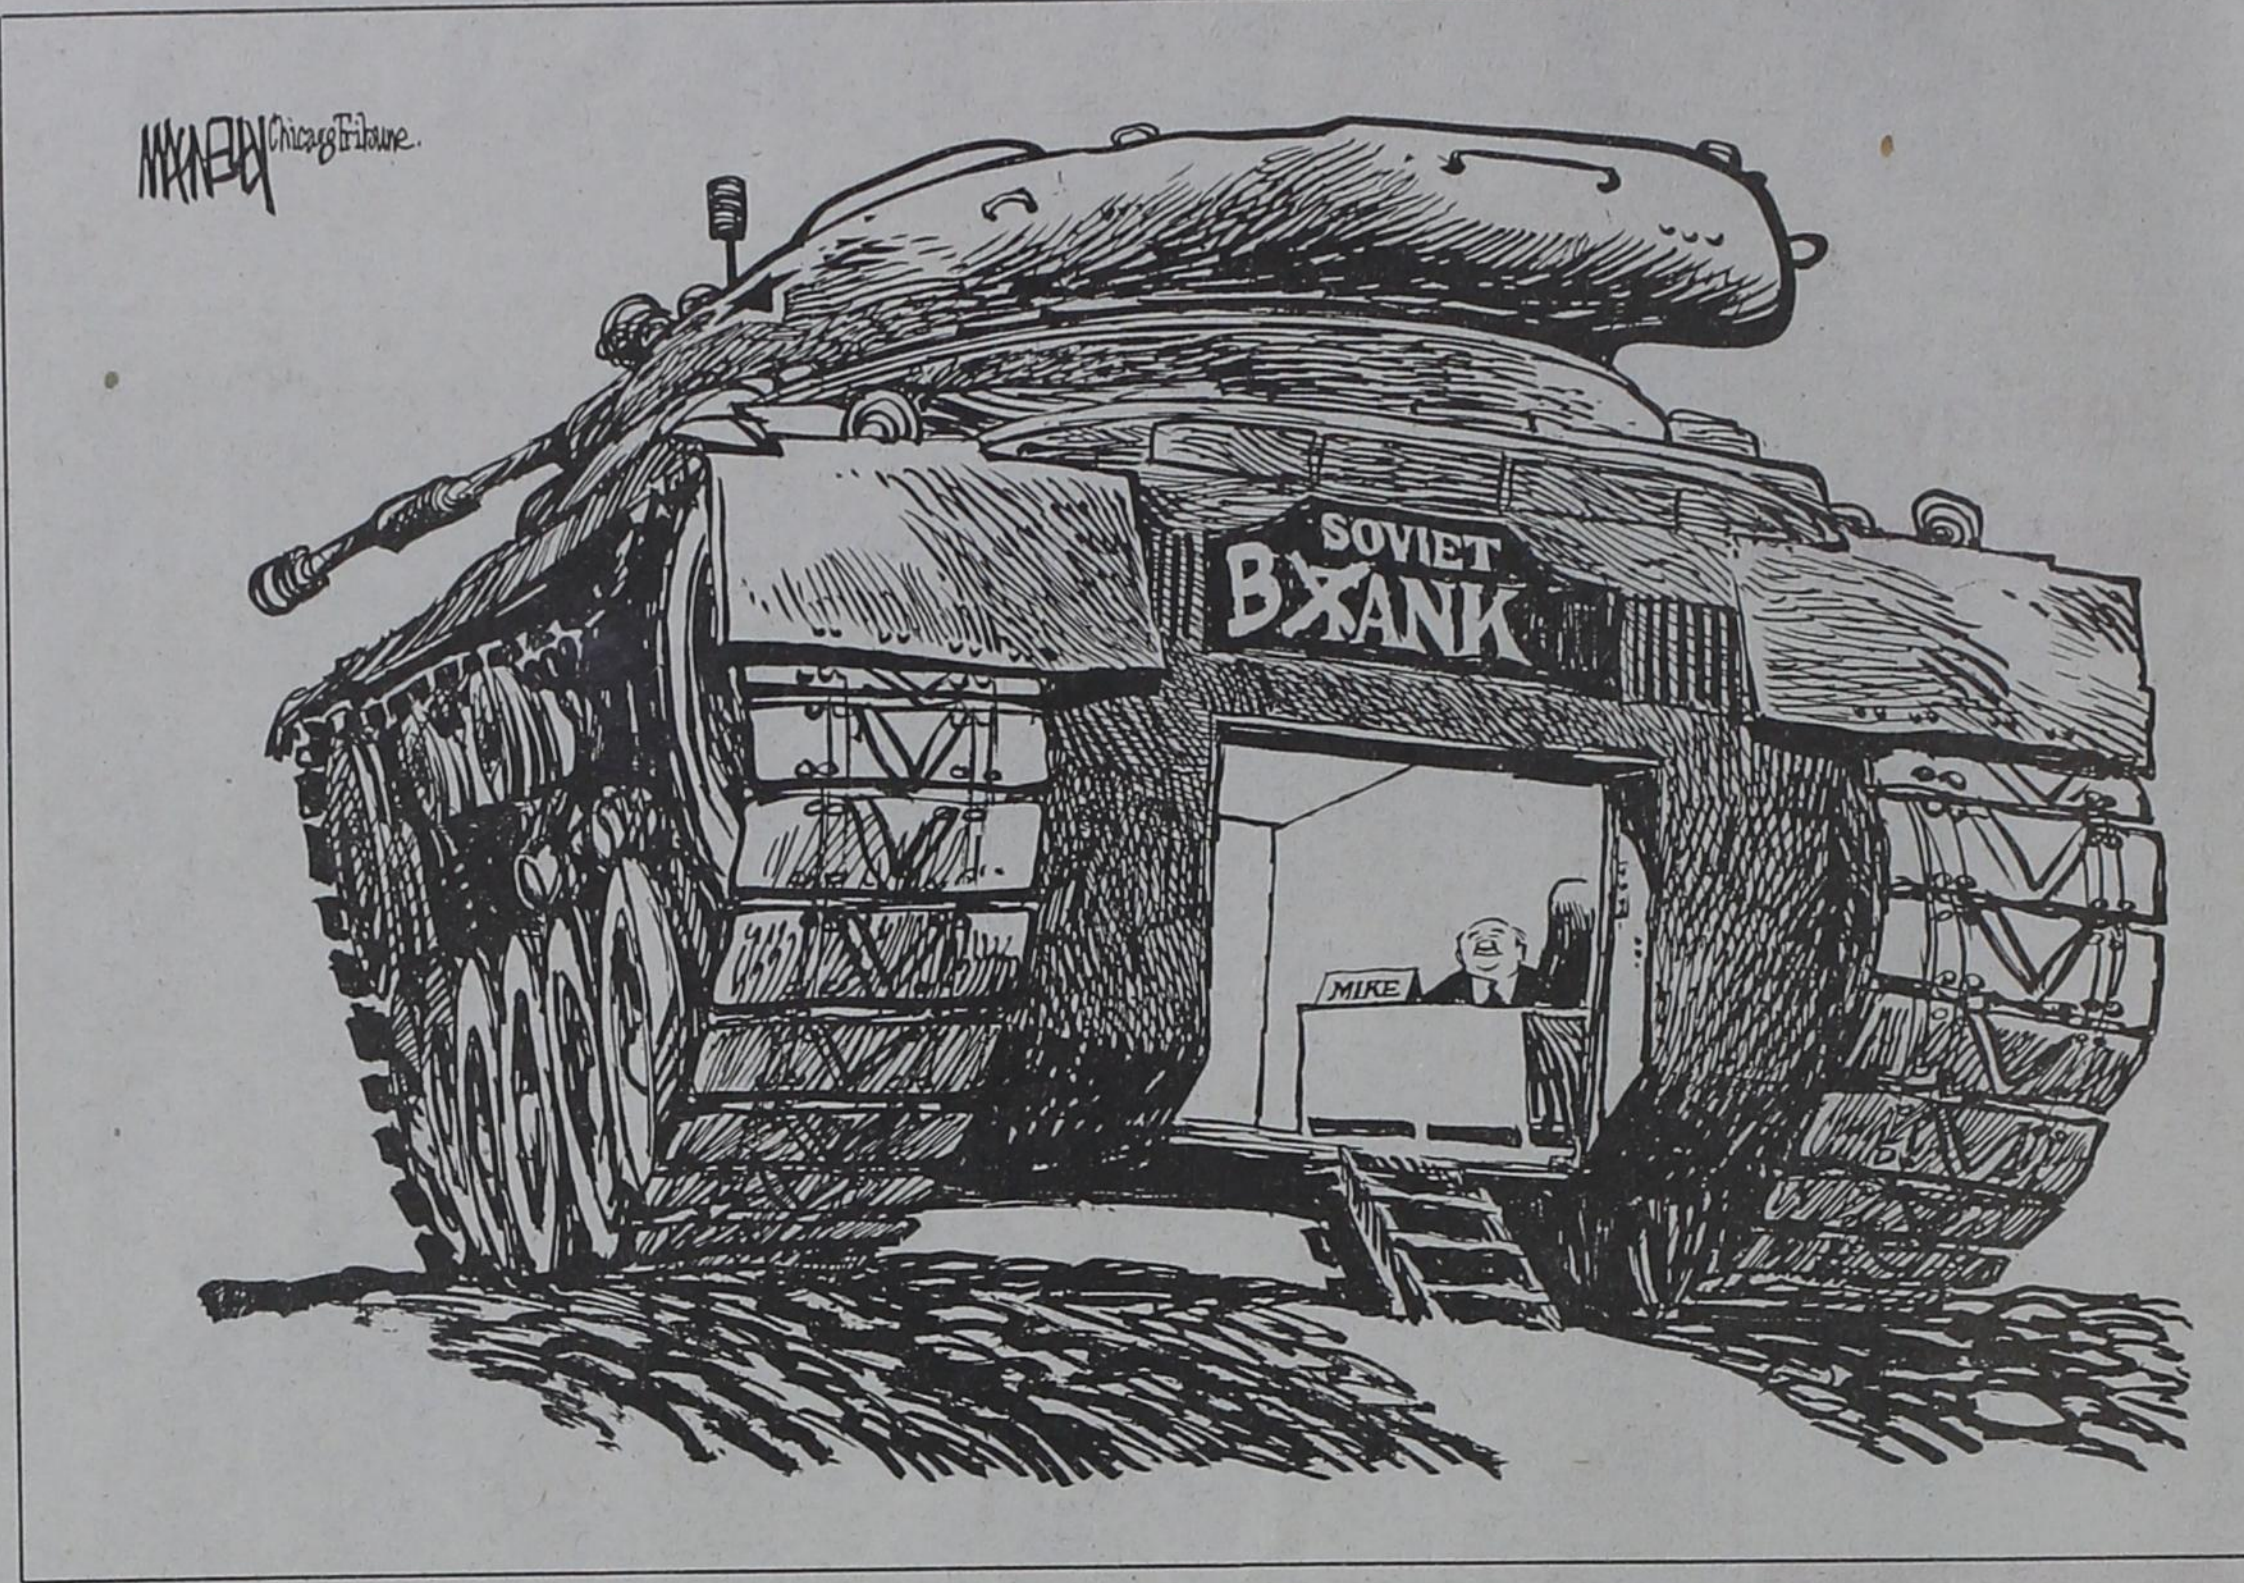

Academically gifted students can bring prestige and fortune to a school just as a Final Four or postseason bowl game appearance would.

Students failing to meet Proposition 48 guidelines can attend junior college just like most other students who are not ready for a four-year school. I believe the new proposal would benefit the athlete, for he or she could receive more exposure and possibly playing time in the junior college system while benefiting from the curriculum.

That approach would be beneficial not because it is easy, but because many of the smaller schools have a more favorable learning environment.

At the neighborhood junior college, the athlete could remain closer to home and pay in-state tuition fees instead of going to Georgetown or similar schools that thrust the unstable student into a harsh environment of tougher professors, new coaches and (as SMU knows) athletic boosters.

Thompson is right. This matter needs to be looked into further. But the real question of whether it is ethical to treat an athlete as a student should be decided by the NCAA.

North benefits from rights, not patriotism

Tom Wicker
Columnist

self-sacrificing Oliver North, they seldom fail to assert those rights when they themselves are in jeopardy.

No doubt many will believe that the Reagan administration has cleverly spared itself further examination, and one president or another the political quandary of whether to pardon North. That's a logical but probably unwarranted inference from the refusal of the administration to release classified documents needed as evidence — apparently both for and against North — in a trial on the Iran-Contra charges.

Such a conspiracy would have to be more adroitly managed than this administration has shown itself capable of. It would require, too, a degree of cynicism and self-protection that no one can reasonably charge to men like George Shultz and Frank Carlucci, who joined in the unanimous decision not to release the documents.

The special prosecutor, Lawrence Walsh, refused to make such an accusation and apparently agreed that some of the documents should not be made public.

A better question, to which we never will have an answer, is whether these unknown documents really are all that vital to national security. Officials are prone to overrate or overstate government secrets — both their importance and their actual secrecy. In this case, they concede that some of the Iran-Contra "secrets" already have become public.

Might a trial on the charges Walsh has dropped have disclosed more about the participation of George Bush and Ronald Reagan in the Iran-Contra fiasco? Possibly, although Attorney General Thornburgh pointed out in a television inquiry that the strict rules of evidence in a criminal trial probably would have worked against such disclosures.

Trying Oliver North, in any event, is not the only way to pursue the larger truth of the Iran-Contra matter. Much testimony already is on the record, but not yet fully analyzed. In an article in the Washington Post on Sunday, for example, Walter Pincus pointed out an apparent contradiction in statements by Donald Regan.

In his book For The Record, Regan recalled that at the Geneva Summit conference in 1985 he and President Reagan were briefed by Robert McFarlane on the November 1985 missile shipment to Iran, before it took place. Fifteen months after that shipment, but before his book was published, Regan told the Tower commission that "there was nothing said to the president in advance" about the November 1985 arms transfer.

That and much other evidence already available, Pincus wrote, suggest "a broader pattern of deception by the White House, CIA and other administration officials" than previously acknowledged. Because of such evidence, Walsh still is considering whether to bring charges against other officials.

Wicker is a syndicated columnist for the New York Times News Service.

NEW YORK — Oliver North probably will not be tried on the most serious offenses against him, and that's too bad. Substantial charges remain, however, and it's reassuring that he benefits from constitutional and legal "technicalities" of the kind he tried to subordinate to "patriotism" during his congressional testimony in 1987.

May it ever be so with the rights of Americans — not least the right to a fair trial. Those who spurn such rights when they appear to allow the guilty to go free, or the non-conforming to march to their own drummer, or national security to be threatened, are themselves protected by the same rights. Like patriotic,

U.S. promises, assurances could prove useless to increasingly isolated Israelis

James Reston
Columnist

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration's first real foreign policy test is likely to come in the Mideast. The leaders of both political parties are talking vaguely about restoration of nonpartisan cooperation abroad, but it's mostly talk. What both need is more precision on policy toward Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The parties have long agreed that Israel's security is a "vital interest" of America. The same thing has been said about our relations with the NATO allies and Japan, with one importance. We have made it clear to our friends and adversaries that we would oppose the conquest of the Western European allies or Japan, with military action if necessary. But no such clear commitment covers our relations with Israel.

That country is described as our principal Mideast ally, and no leader of each party has ever suggested that we would permit its destruction.

The Reagan administration has taken Yasir Arafat's word that he opposes "terrorism" and recognizes Israel's "right to exist" within secure borders, in accordance with Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, but he does not recognize Israel's present borders and does not regard the present subversive warfare against Israel as "terrorism."

Meanwhile, officials here urge Israel to exchange "land for peace" as a basis for compromising the present difficulties, but they don't say what America would do if Israel gave up the disputed land and got no peace. Thus, the Israelis, Palestinians and hostile Arab states that are armed by the Soviet Union are left in doubt.

This vagueness has been tolerated by both parties ever since America presided over the formation of Israel, and it's doubtful that any secure settlement in the region will ever be reached until Washington convinces everybody concerned that Israel's existence within fair and defensible frontiers is really a "vital interest."

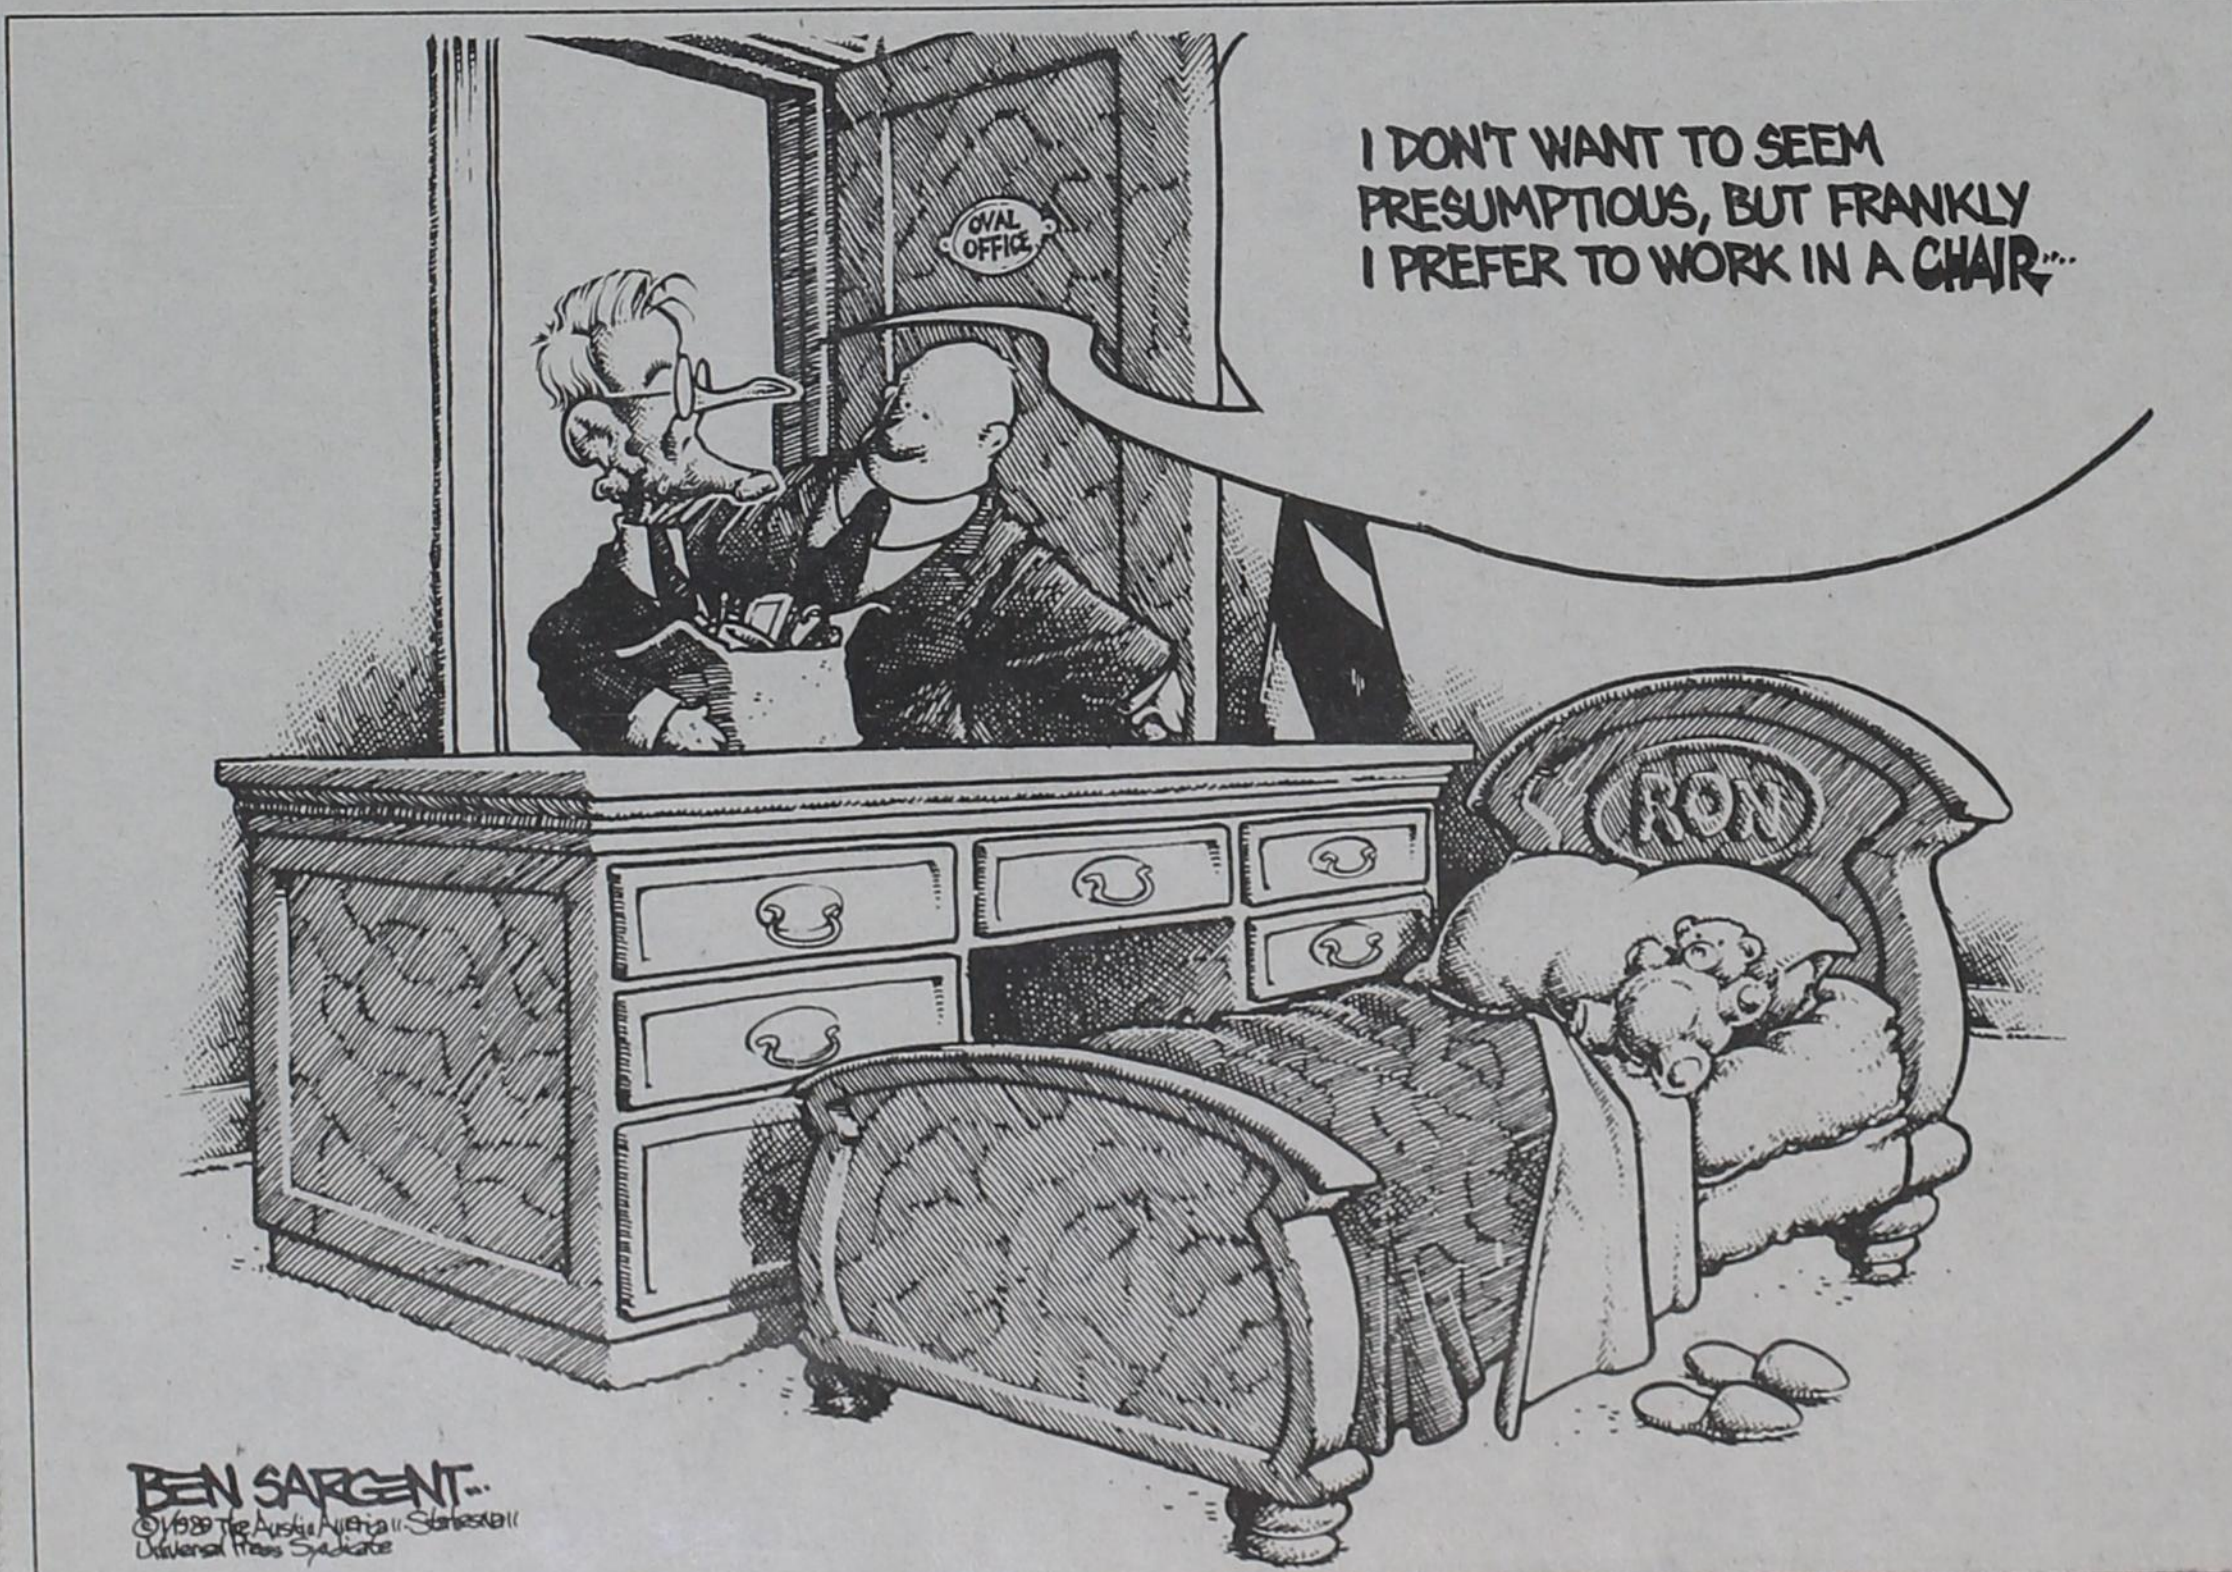

The new administration has a chance to make a new, more practical beginning.

Merely talking with Arafat about "terrorism," "peace for land" and U.N. resolutions, without convincing him and his associates that America is ready to back the security of Israel with force, is not likely to make any fundamental change in this endless and intolerable state of semiwar.

At least the Bush administration, along with its other allies, should take a new look at it. Talking to Arafat alone is no answer to a crisis that inevitably will get worse as the Palestinian population increases and the divided and diminished Israelis find themselves isolated, with only promises from Washington to rely on.

State insurance board needs new management, Montford says

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — A state Senate committee Monday grilled State Board of Insurance Chairman Edwin J. Smith Jr. on allegations that the board has failed to adequately regulate the insurance industry, but Smith dismissed many of the accusations as "old news."

Following the meeting, State Affairs Committee Chairman Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, renewed his call for the resignation of all three board members.

"It looks to me like they haven't really taken any meaningful action," Montford said. "It's a management issue, and the consequences are dire enough that it needs to be addressed, I think, with a new management team."

Montford recessed the meeting until 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, when the other two board members, David Thornberry and Jim Nelson, are expected to testify.

"Clearly, we are not a perfect agency," Smith told the committee. But he said many of the major issues contained in an investigative report into the agency were "old news."

"The State Board of Insurance has the will and the ability to do the job that needs to be done," Smith said.

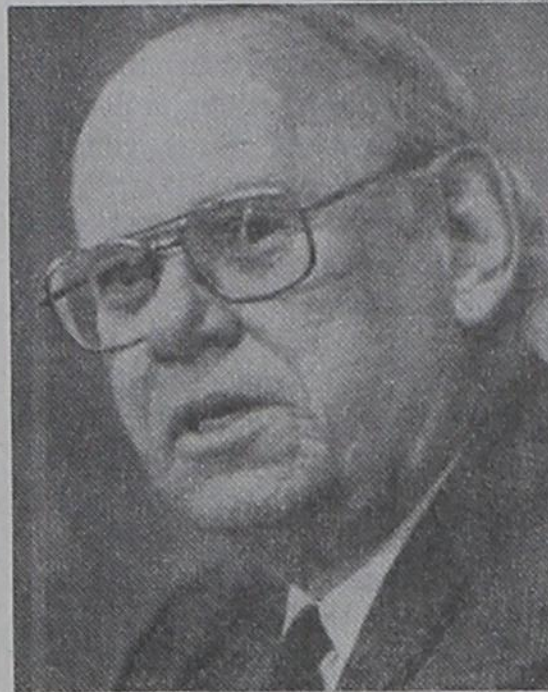

Last week, Montford released the findings of an investigation that portrayed the state insurance department as rife with waste, inefficiency and mismanagement.

After hearing details of the investigation by former FBI agent Eugene Gee, who conducted the two-month probe, Smith was chastised by committee members.

"This cannot continue," Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, told Smith.

Montford

Smith

"It cannot happen again. We can't have fraud going around down there that you don't know about. We've got to get a handle on it."

The inquiry said the board and staff failed to take over failing insurance companies in a timely manner, thus placing the company's policyholders at risk where they could not collect on insurance claims.

The report also cited "wholesale hiring of unqualified, untrained individuals" within the department and noted a high incidence of hiring based on cronyism.

In other areas, the report found expenditures from a special fund were used for administrative costs, when the fund was to be used exclusively to supplement the payment of claims and costs of liquidation after a failing company's assets have been sold.

The report also detailed an instance of where an insurance company sold policies without a license for 5½ years.

Montford earlier said he will request a legislative investigation unless management changes are made at the insurance department.

He said he has turned over the results of the earlier investigation to the Travis County District Attorney's Office.

The board members have refused to tender their resignations. They concede there are problems at the agency, but said many of the troubles outlined in Montford's report are either wrong, have already been addressed, or are the result of massive growth and new regulatory duties of the agency.

The board has been under fire in recent months from legislators and consumer-rights advocates, who say the industry has not been effectively regulated.

The criticism grew in October when Dallas-based National County Mutual Fire Insurance Co. was declared insolvent with a deficit of $56 million, making it one of the state's largest insurance company failures ever.

Student Senate to offer workshops for group funding requests

By STACY ALBRACHT
The University Daily

Funding request packets for student organizations interested in obtaining financial assistance from the Student Association for the 1989-90 academic year are available in the SA office.

Workshops designed to help student leaders prepare the packets will be presented free of charge by the Student Senate Budget and Finance Committee in conjunction with the Student Organizations Services office.

The workshops will be from 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and Monday and from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. Feb. 1 in the University Center Mesa Room.

"We strongly encourage every organization that is requesting funding from the Student Association to send representatives to the workshops," said Rodney Markham, chairman of the 1988-89 Budget and Finance Committee.

The workshops will provide organizations the chance to obtain assistance in completing the request packets.

"We realize the packets are complicated," Markham said. "The workshops will provide a walk-through for filling out the packets. Information on what needs to be included will be provided, and all questions about the packets will be answered."

Some organizations, however, are specifically excluded from SA funding. They include organizations not registered with the Dean of Students Office, religious, political, social or recreational groups and organizations that significantly restrict membership.

Other restricted groups include organizations not receiving money from student service fees and honoraries whose sole purpose is individual recognition.

After application, the organization must send at least one officer, preferably the president and the treasurer, to an interview. Officers must sign up for the interview no later than Feb. 6.

All organizations applying for funding must have budget packets bound by the SOS office. Any packet not bound by SOS will not be considered for funding.

Packets also may be duplicated by the SOS office for a fee.

"The better prepared an organization is when requesting funding, the better their chances for receiving the funds," Markham said.

Tech to see an early rush of company interviewers, director says

By MELISSA WADDELL
The University Daily

Take heed. The second-best time for graduating seniors to interview for jobs is approaching, said David Kraus, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Kraus said from mid-January to mid-March is the second-best time for interviews. He said the best time is during the fall semester between September and the beginning of November.

Kraus said beginning in mid-January, between 15 and 22 companies will be on campus interviewing each day. In March the number drops to five to seven companies daily.

To help graduating seniors, the Career Planning and Placement Center is offering orientation sessions. The sessions will be offered twice daily through Feb. 3. Sessions are to familiarize students with the campus interview bidding system and other activities available to students. Students may register for classes in 337 West Hall or may call the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Kraus said that for students who will be interviewing on campus, the bidding process, which has been in use for only four or five years, is better than the old procedure. In the past, students had to stand in line up to 20 hours to sign up on the list to interview with a company.

Students now are given 500 points each week to bid on companies they want to interview with. Students can pick up a list of companies that will be interviewing on Thursday's prior to the following week's visit. The advance list gives the student the weekend to decide exactly where to put the most amount of points.

Kraus said advance planning forces students to make a choice. In the past, the only choice was whether to stand in line for hours or to not stand in line.

Bids are due at 5 p.m. each Monday. Kraus said the career planning and placement employees go through bids and that the top 14 bidders for each company are posted Wednesday morning in the placement office.

Kraus said his staff also can help students in majors that do not interview on campus. Throughout the semester seminars are offered in resume writing, cover letter writing and preparing for interviews.

Court denies reporters access to records

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Confidential investigation files on Southern Methodist University's recruiting scandal will remain privileged information, the U.S. Supreme Court decided Monday.

Without comment, the Supreme Court let stand a ruling that files compiled by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Southwest Athletic Conference do not have to be made public under the Texas Open Records Act.

Last May, the Texas Supreme Court ruled in favor of the university by failing to find any reversible errors in lower court rulings that athletics departments at the schools are not "governmental bodies" subject to the Texas Open Records Act.

The Dallas Morning News, the Dallas Times-Herald, WFAA-TV and other news organizations sought the information on SMU and three other conference schools under the Texas Open Records Act after a football recruiting discrepancy was uncovered at the Dallas school.

"Obviously, we are disappointed that the initial federal court ruling supporting the public's right to know was not upheld by the higher court," said Roy Bode, editor of the Dallas Times Herald.

"We're very disappointed that the court would not hear the appeal, because we believe the original ruling was correct," said Ralph Langer, vice president and executive editor of The Dallas Morning News.

Langer said there apparently will be no other ground on which to appeal the case. He said the action will make it more difficult for Texas reporters to cover private universities.

Officials from other news organizations did not immediately return telephone calls from The Associated Press.

The news organizations also sought SWC files on SMU, as well as Texas Christian University, Baylor University and Rice University, which are private schools.

The news organizations had based their case on the 1973 state law that requires "governmental bodies" receiving "public funds" to make public their internal documents.

A federal trial judge ruled that the state law applies to the NCAA and the Southwest Conference and ordered that the sought-after documents be surrendered so it could be determined which documents should be made public.

When the case advanced to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last July, the appellate court reversed that ruling.

The appeals court agreed that the NCAA and the Southwest Conference receive Texas public funds. But it said they are not governmental bodies, defined in the state law as those entities "supported in whole or in part by public funds."

The news organizations appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that the appeals court wrongly reversed the trial judge's factual rulings without finding that those rulings were "clearly erroneous."

But the high court let the ruling stand.

'Beaches' will test sands of time

By MARIA HUNT
The University Daily

"Beaches" is one of the more emotional and heartwarming movies I have seen this year.

Starring Bette Midler and Barbara Hershey, "Beaches" has a well-written story line and seems to have taken a great deal of thought and compassion on the part of producer Garry Marshall.

In a passionate yet tender story, C.C. Bloom (Midler) and Hilary Whitney (Hershey) portray two childhood friends from completely different backgrounds who grow up and go their separate ways but whose steadfast friendship lasts through thick and thin.

Bloom has craved attention and the limelight since childhood and is determined to become a Broadway star.

Her ambitions lead her to involvement with John Pierce, a Broadway show producer played by John Heard.

After becoming a successful lawyer, Whitney leaves her home and shows up in New York, to Bloom's surprise. Whitney and Pierce meet and become romantically involved, and C.C.'s jealousy creates the first tense moment in the two women's friendship.

But when Whitney goes home to take care of her ill father and stays away long enough to meet a fellow lawyer and marry him, Bloom's success on Broadway heightens and she and Pierce get married. When the two couples get together for the first time, there obviously still are feelings between Whitney and Pierce.

After other ups and downs in their lives, the two women find themselves alone and needing each other's friendship more than ever before.

Midler's excellent portrayal of the Broadway actress shows off her superb vocal and theatrical talents, and she seems to feel at home in the character she plays.

Hershey also does a good job of portraying the little rich girl who grows up and finds out what life — and death — are all about. She acts well in the role of a sensitive, intelligent woman, unlike Midler's dynamic character, who is robust and rosy-cheeked.

Although the ending of the movie seems rather slow-moving, the emotions of the moment are well-performed by Midler and Hershey.

A movie full of sentiment and tenderness as well as excitement, "Beaches" is a wonderful film for anyone who enjoys Bette Midler and wants to laugh and cry along with the actors on the screen.

Classics axed in film buff's nightmare

Tim Weinheimer
Lifestyles

Jean Arthur, Katharine Hepburn, Spencer Tracy and Humphrey Bogart no longer take to the screen Wednesday nights with the eradication of a Texas Tech classic, Cinematech.

Cinematech provided Tech students and the community alike with the opportunity to enjoy those movies only showed on late night television and rare occasions. With the rage of video sales and rentals, movies packed with action, violence and sexual content attracting the college crowd, the American classics and foreign films are left to fill video store back shelves.

Attendance figures for the fall 1988 semester at Cinematech features such as "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" and "Son of the Sheik" sparsely filled the theatre with an average of 15 to 20 people.

It is not good to see that the big screen has become a small screen, perhaps a 19-inch color TV, and that a genuine interest in quality entertainment and just plain good acting no longer exists in our generation.

Granted, funds provided through the university and student service fees should be allocated elsewhere when the projector plays only for a handful of interested students. However, the opportunity to view a wealth of history and memories can be priceless not only to classics lovers but to a misinformed and unfortunate generation to come.

Famed quartet to play at Tech

By TIM WEINHEIMER
The University Daily

The Juilliard String Quartet

The combined musical talents of the Juilliard String Quartet will perform at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the University Center Allen Theatre.

Founded in 1946, the Juilliard Quartet is the quartet-in-residence at the Juilliard School of Music. Its members have trained many of the quartets active in today's chamber music world.

Members of the quartet for the Lubbock performance are Robert Mann (violin), Joel Smirnoff (second violin), Samuel Rhodes (viola) and Joel Krosnick (cello).

Mann is the only member of the group who has been with the quartet since its conception in 1946. Having received his initial music training in his hometown of Portland, Ore., and an alumnus of Juilliard, Mann has composed more than 70 works, including an orchestra fantasia requested and first performed by Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Smirnoff is the newest member of the group as second violinist. With a degree in history from the University of Chicago and both bachelor's and master's degrees in music from the Juilliard School, Smirnoff has participated in the world premieres of many contemporary works. The former member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made his recital debut at Carnegie Hall in 1985.

Violinist Rhodes, a composer as well as violinist, holds a master of fine arts degree from Princeton University. In addition to many summers' participation in the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont, Rhodes has been featured several times in the Music from Marlboro series at Town Hall and on tour.

Krosnick, a native of Connecticut, is active as both a performer and an educator. He has toured with the University of Iowa String Quartet and the New York Chamber Soloists and has performed frequently as soloist with various orchestras.

Ticket prices for the event are $7 for Tech students and $10 for all other patrons. Tickets can be purchased at the UC ticket booth between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. today and Wednesday and also at Sears at South Plains Mall.

Sharp says pivotal stretch ahead

By JOEL BROWN
The University Daily

With the Texas Tech women's basketball team back on a winning note following a 76-67 triumph over TCU, tonight's SMU contest marks the beginning of a pivotal week, according to coach Marsha Sharp.

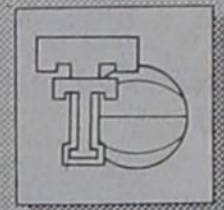

"I think our players are excited and carrying some momentum from the TCU win with them," Sharp said. "I think we have an opportunity to put ourselves in the middle of things again after this week."

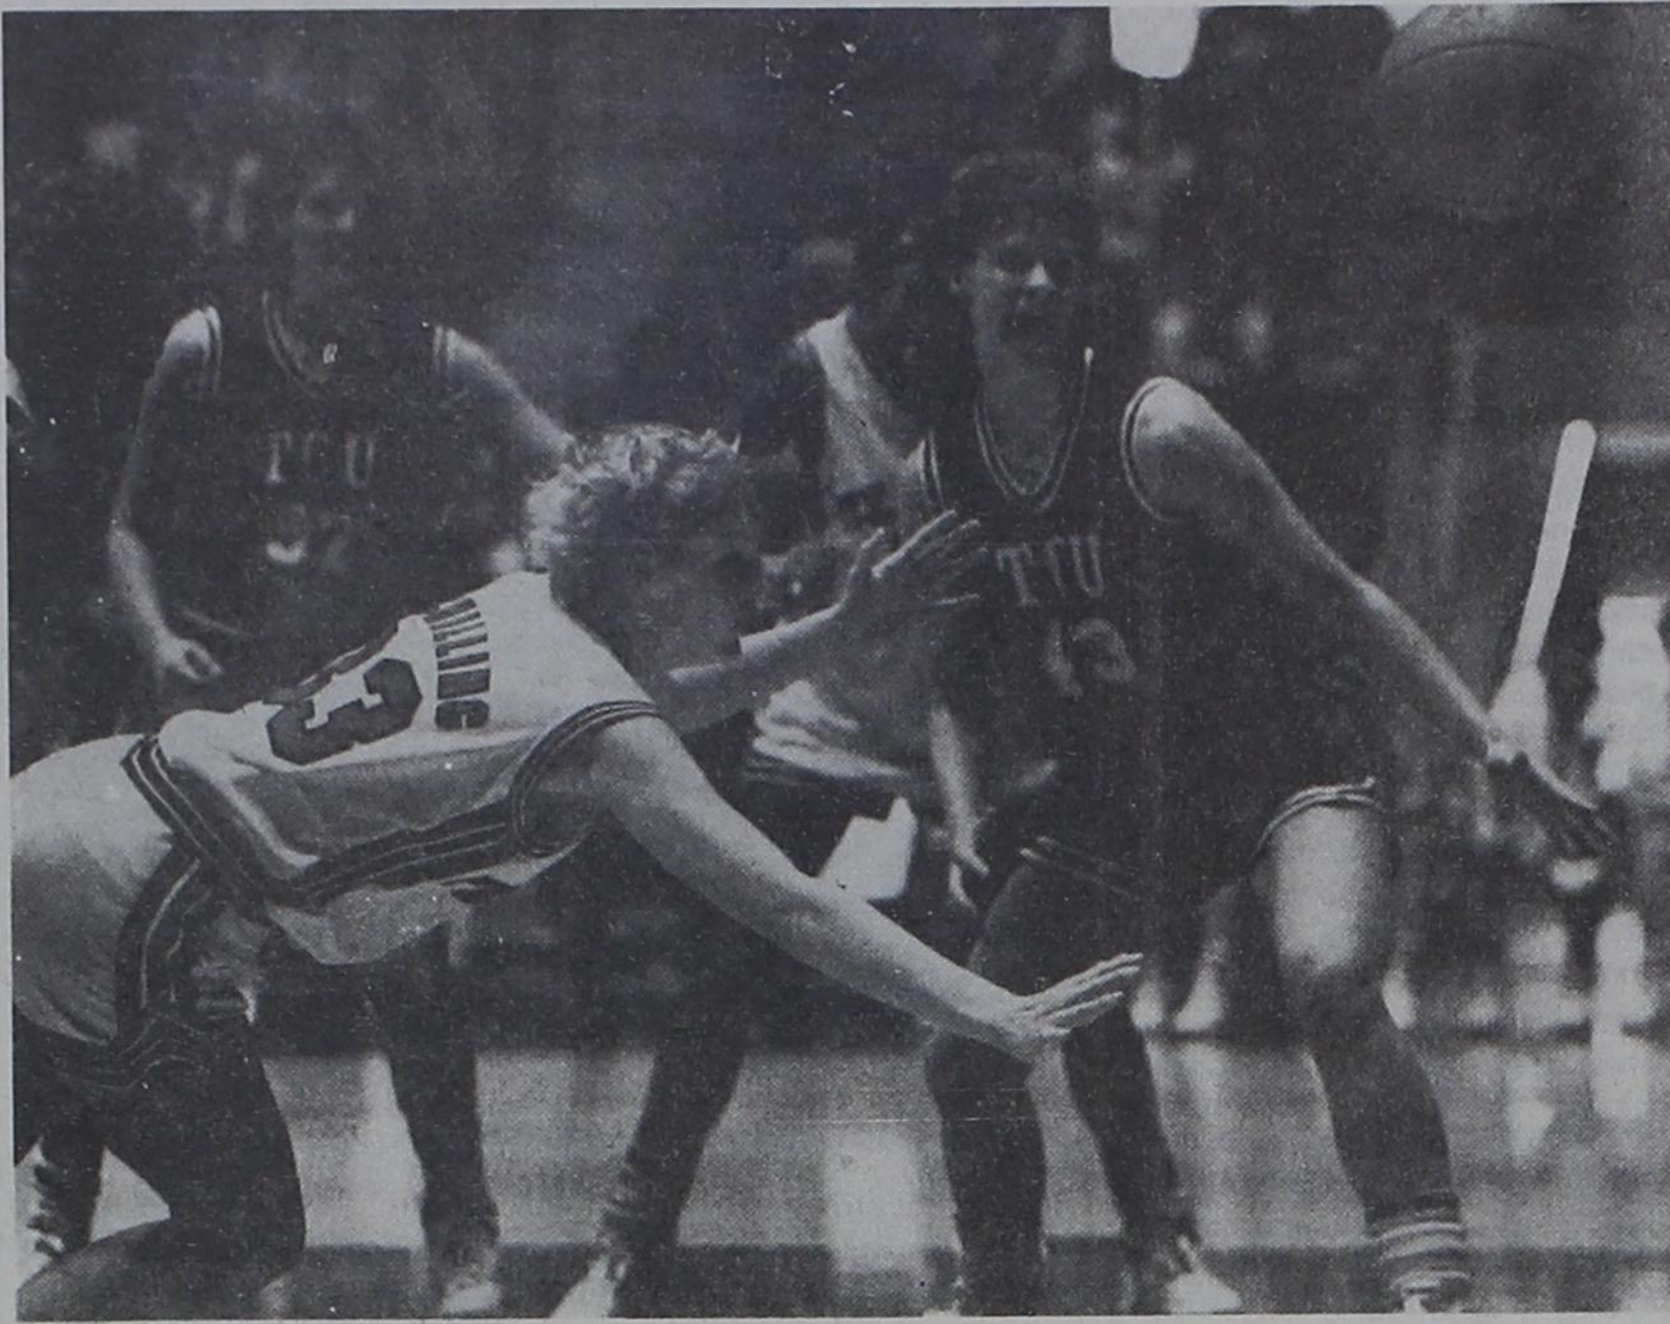

SMU brings a 7-6 record, 3-2 in the Southwest Conference, to Lubbock Municipal Coliseum tonight at 7 p.m. to face Tech, 8-8 and 2-3.

"If we were to come away with two wins we could find ourselves possibly as high as tied for second within another 10 days. However, if we were to lose one or both of them we'll probably find ourselves in a fight for fourth, fifth or sixth place which could be a struggle for us down the stretch," Sharp said.

The Mustangs were riding a three-game winning streak before falling to Houston in overtime at home Saturday, 91-78. SMU's other SWC loss came to Texas A&M — also in overtime.

"They'll put some pressure on us,

Airball

Texas Tech's Kelly Schilling dives for a loose Saturday's 76-67 Red Raider win in Lubbock. ball ahead of TCU's Kathleen Olson (43) in which is something we haven't handled well at times, but maybe we'll do a better job of handling it tomorrow because of some of the past experiences we've had with it," Sharp said.

Junior post Stacey Siebert, who had a game-high 24 points against the Horned Frogs on Saturday, agreed the half-court press could hamper the Raiders.

Siebert leads all Tech scorers with 13.4 points a game as well as rebounders with 9.5. Junior guard Karen Farst averages 12.4.

Leading the small and quick SMU squad is guard Jeannia Nix. The 5-7 senior averages 16.9 points-per-game for the Mustangs followed by senior forward LeQuita Smith with 13.8. Smith was an All-SWC selection a year ago when the Mustangs finished 6-10 in league play — a school best.

"Their half court offense is probably the best we'll play all year," Sharp said. "They are not as big as we are and have great quickness."

Senior post Diana Witt leads SMU in rebounding, averaging 7.5 a match.

Myers concerned after disappointing loss to TCU

By JOEL WEST
The University Daily

Coach Gerald Myers said Monday that Texas Tech's 57-56 loss to TCU on Sunday probably was the most disappointing one of the season and that he is concerned about how it may have affected the Red Raiders.

"It was a disappointing loss to say the least, because it was a home conference game," Myers said at his pointing one of the season and that he is concerned about how it may have affected the Red Raiders.

Myers said the game, which dropped the Raiders to 1-4 in the Southwest Conference and 6-10 overall, will offer the players a character test.

"I think this game (TCU) will really test us, so we're going to really have to put some thought into that for the SMU game," he said.

Tech hosts the Mustangs 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Lubbock Municipal Coliseum. After Saturday's loss to Houston, SMU is 3-2 and 7-8.

"Our guys have felt bad about all our losses, but I think it set them back a little more (Sunday)," he said. "But we've just got to look at it that there's a lot of good basketball left and there's still a lot at stake."

"We've got to come right back strong and not let that bother us to the extent that we're not going come back and to be ready to play against SMU. But that is a little bit of a concern."

Raider vaulter sets Tech mark

Two Texas Tech pole vaulters returned from the Oklahoma University Invitational Meet in Norman, Okla., this weekend with more than just experience.

Brit Pursley set a school record in the event by vaulting 17 feet and 1 inch. His effort also was good enough to win third place at the competition.

Mike Turner, who broke the record just last weekend, finished in eighth place by clearing 16-0.

Turner broke the previous Tech record with his vault of 17-0 at the Tech Triangular on Jan. 13, eclipsing Clay Wright's 16-0 set in 1984.

Both Pursley and Turner will be participating in the Red Raider Invitational Jan. 28 at the Athletic Training Center.
