Bill grants $5 billion to higher education

By LEANNA EFIRD
The University Daily

A higher education appropriations bill that sets aside $158 million for Texas Tech University for the 1990-91 biennium was scheduled for a hearing before the state Legislature Conference Committee Monday.

The bill, which appropriates a total of $5 billion to higher education, has been passed in the House and the Senate, but amendments are being compromised in the Conference Committee.

Texas A&M University received $335 million, and the University of Texas was appropriated $396 million.

The bill proposes to replace a 5 percent recommended cut in funding for higher education made by the Legislative Budget Board and calls for a 7.1 percent increase in faculty salaries.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, who introduced the legislation, strongly supports the faculty pay raise.

"Texas is still behind the nation in average faculty salaries, and even with this pay raise, we will not reach the national average," said Meredith Murphy, a press aide for Caperton.

"We are in competition with other states for top-quality professors, and the only way we can get them is through better salaries."

The legislation also appropriates $36.5 million to fund programs in remedial education.

Remedial programs are scheduled to begin in the fall to coincide with the newly implemented Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP) test.

The TASP test will be given to incoming freshmen at public universities all over Texas. Students who fail any of the three parts of the test will be placed in remedial classes.

Tech will provide remedial classes in English, math and reading. Students must remain in remedial classes until they can pass the TASP test, said Len Ainsworth, vice provost for academic affairs at Tech.

"These remedial classes will be valuable to students who need to brush up on skills or learn skills they did not learn in high school," Ainsworth said. "My only concern is that remedial classes are costly and can hinder students in their college careers."

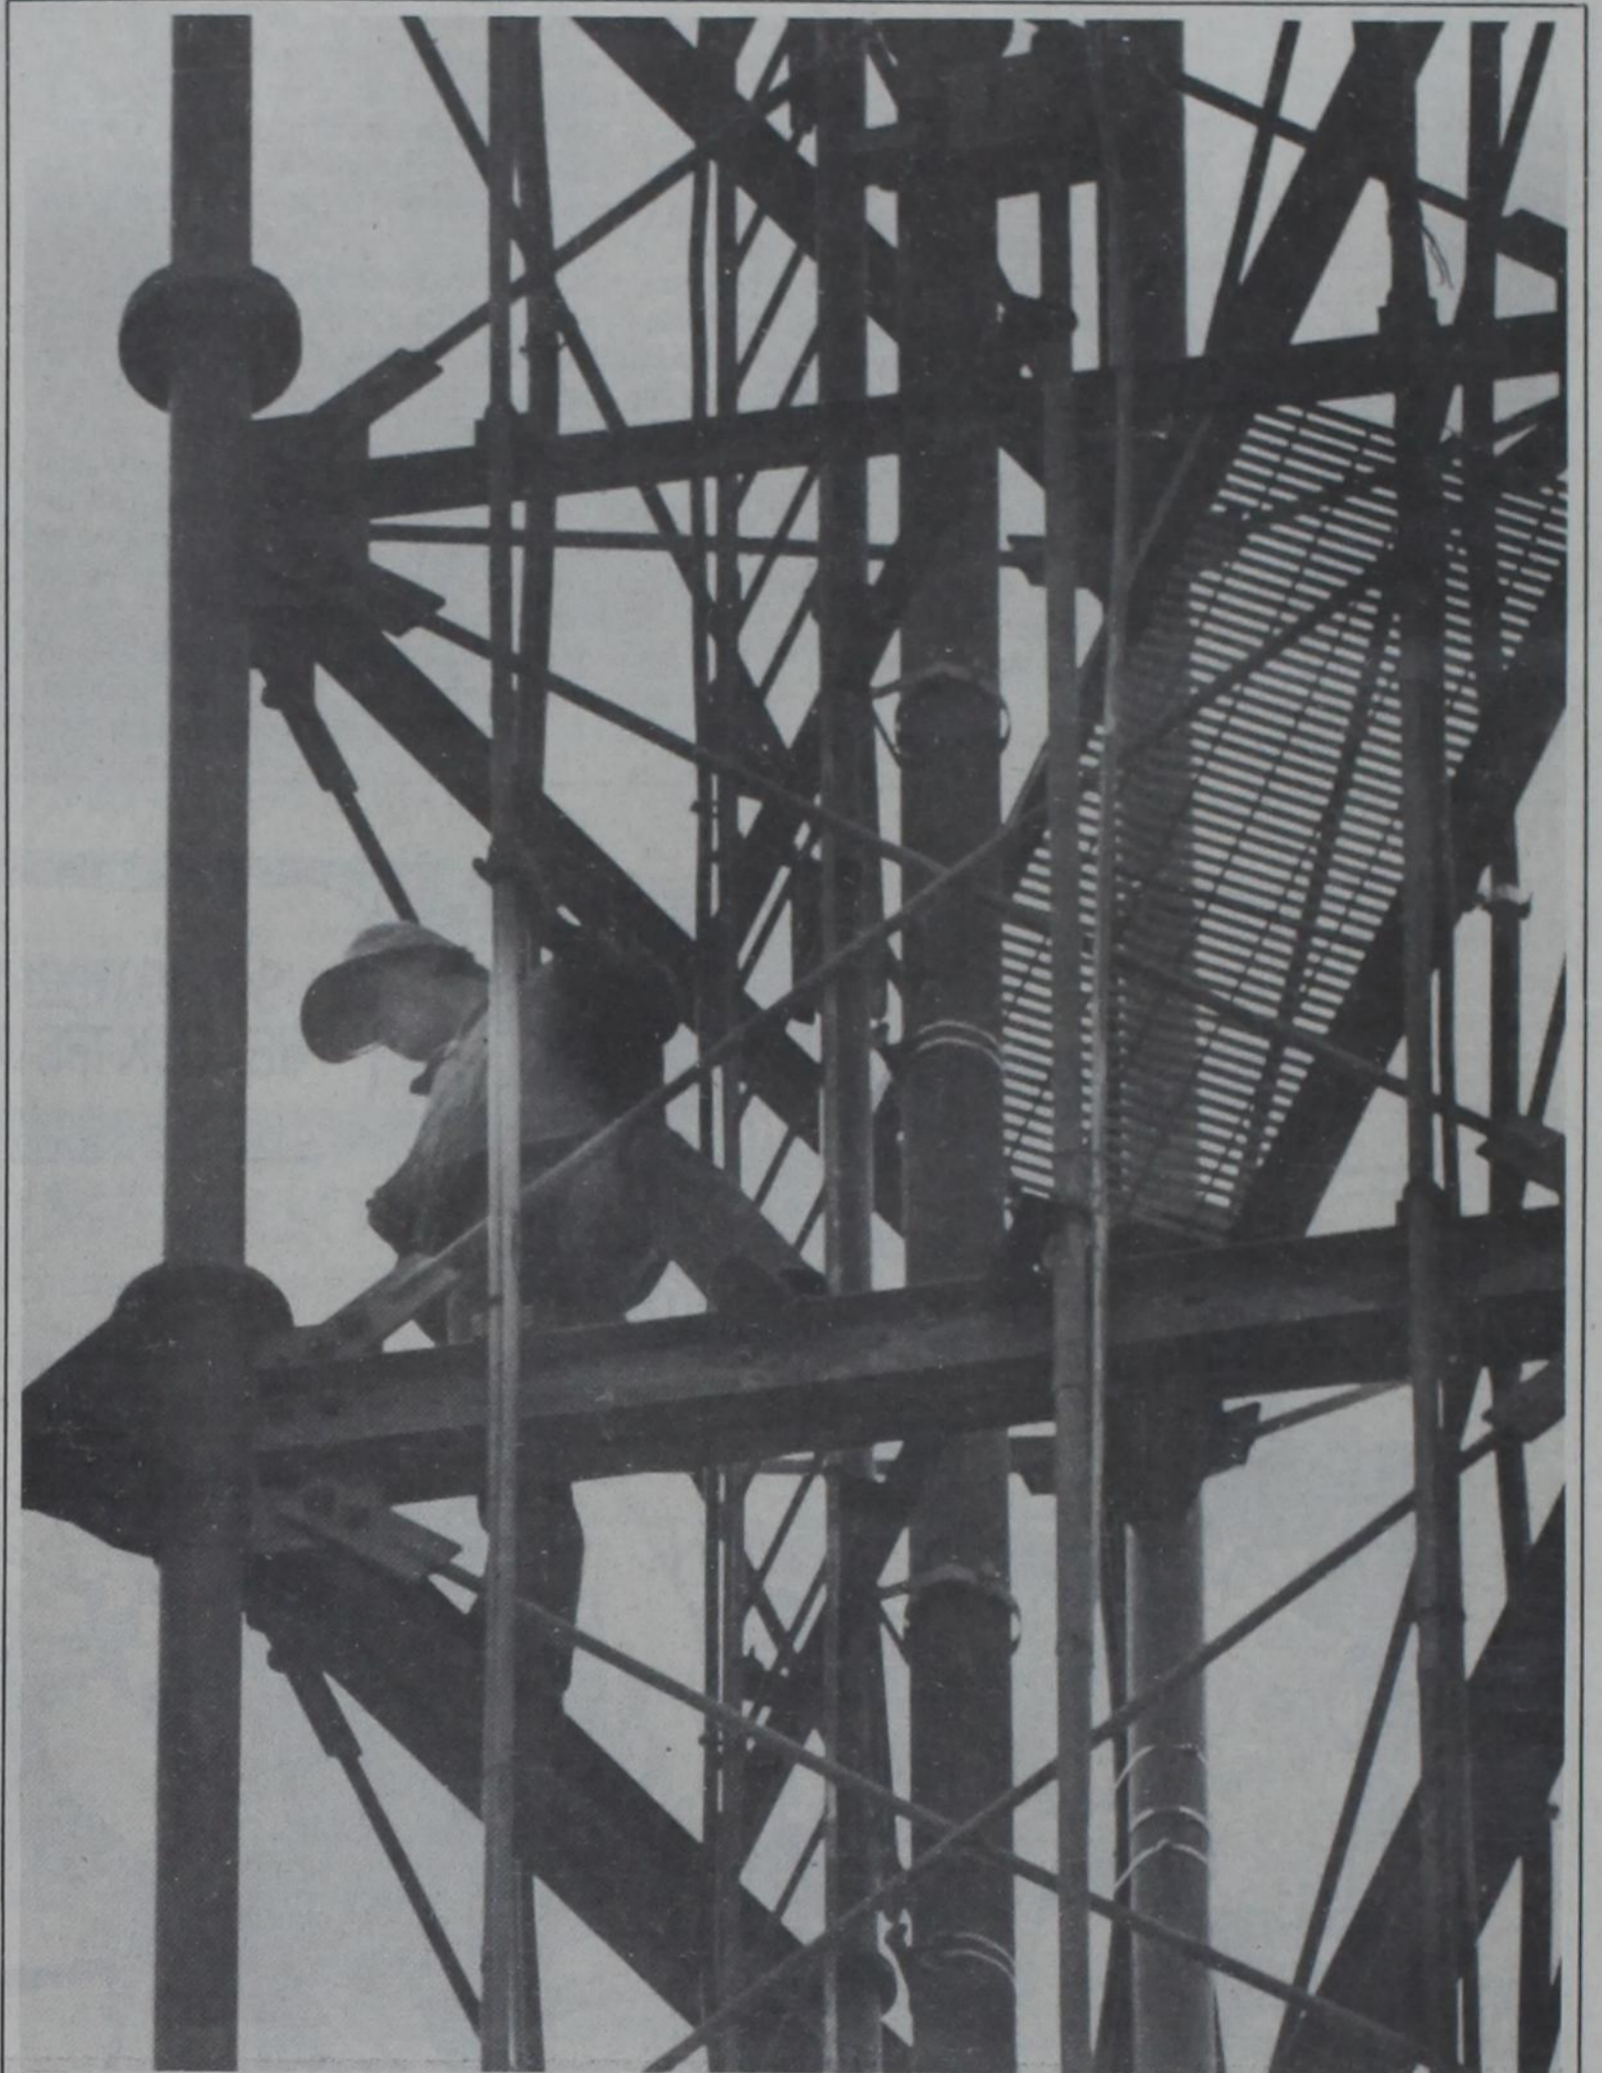

Ainsworth said grades will be received in the classes and that credit hours will be earned, but he said credit cannot go toward total hours needed for graduation.

Don Garnett, TASP coordinator at Tech, said university officials currently are organizing a remedial program.

"We want to provide a program that would most benefit the students," he said.

Garnett said some students benefit more from computer-assisted programs, while others need the environment provided by the classroom and others can benefit more from self-help programs.

"Right now we're just trying to develop a program that would meet the needs of the students most," Garnett said.

Men's reasons for seeking out prostitutes vary, experts say

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the second in a three-part series on the problem of prostitution in the Lubbock area. Today's story deals with the reasons why men choose prostitutes to satisfy their sexual desires.

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

Women who are willing to offer sex for money always will be in demand as long as men are willing to pay for the sexual gratification, a social worker said.

Men typically go to prostitutes simply for sex, a quick physical release that brings no emotional attachment, said Judith Warman-Adams, a clinical social worker in Lubbock.

"Some men are looking for just a physical release, and others need the fulfillment of a fantasy," she said. "Sex with a prostitute is something you pay for and absolutely nothing else is required."

Darrel Farris, a Lubbock sex therapist, said curiosity or desire for new partners may drive some men to visit prostitutes.

"When people go to a prostitute, they think that the prostitute knows everything about sex, so there is a great deal of curiosity and permission to get into more bizarre sexual acts," he said.

June Pinkston, a social worker and psychotherapist in Lubbock, said many men suffer from a "madonna-whore complex" — they are only capable of having sex with prostitutes because they are "bad women."

"Some men feel guilty about having sex," Pinkston said. "They may visit a prostitute because in some ways they feel they are protecting the good woman from anything shocking or bad."

Because the man is paying for the woman's attention, he is considered to have the right to choose what services she will perform, as well as the scenario that occurs. Warman-Adams said many men turn to prostitutes to buy the illusion of romance.

"She may fill his need to feel special or desirable," she said. "He can buy her fascination."

Farris indicated men often go to prostitutes in order to act out sexual fantasies. Because they are getting paid, hookers will participate in fantasies involving costumes and props, often performing sexual acts the wife refuses to perform, Farris said.

But relations some men have with hookers go beyond simple sex, Farris said.

In many cases, prostitutes fill an emotional need in men. With a prostitute, the man has permission to say, as well as do, anything, and he does not feel that he will ever have to answer later for what he may say, Farris said.

"A man may share with a hooker feelings which he has suppressed with his spouse," he said.

More men typically visit street-walkers rather than higher priced call-girls. Visits to street-walkers generally are impulsive, but once a man begins to visit prostitutes, he frequently returns, Farris said.

Farris indicated that among college-age men, curiosity is the major motivation for visiting prostitutes. Dares or fraternity initiation rites are other motives. Ten percent of young men who visit prostitutes go simply because they want someone to talk with, Farris said.

Many of the men who visit prostitutes, regardless of socio-economic background or age, are married, Farris said.

"It has been traditional, that if a man is married, his home environment is low in communication and low in sexual expression," Farris said. "There is some irony here, because in many ways it doesn't make sense. If you can get it for nothing, why pay for it? But I guess one can say that it never has but it is still here."

Farris said men who visit prostitutes usually have guilt feelings about the incident.

"They usually have some guilt feelings that they have done something wrong, and they may use that as an excuse not to come back," he said.

Farris said the guilt stems from visiting another sexual partner rather than feeling guilty because they violated the law.

"There seems to be a thrill from breaking the law," he said.

Pinkston said the thrill may accompany feelings that the woman is a criminal, and because she is a "bad woman," she deserves any punishment she may get.

Fear of AIDS rather than fear of the law soon may bring prostitution to an end, at least among street-walkers, Farris said. Men are practicing extreme caution as they come to realize sex is not worth dying over, he said.

Every society has prostitutes, and prostitution probably always will be around, Pinkston said. Even though prostitution may fill a need for some men, she said, the sale of sex is destructive.

"Prostitution is destructive because it involves using people," she said. "Although it serves as an outlet, it is an addiction and is not any healthier than any other abuse."

Warman-Adams said prostitution is destructive for both parties involved because the relationship involves a lack of self-respect.

"This transaction is at the core a dehumanizing act," she said. "Any intimate encounter that is not based on mutual knowledge, understanding and genuine affection for a relationship is a dehumanizing encounter."

"If they have to sneak out in the middle of the night and meet in a corn field, as long as there are men and women in this world, there are going to be extramarital affairs as well as prostitution," Farris said.

Bush bumbles toward causing wound in SALT

Tom Wicker
Columnist

Is President Bush about to fall victim to the same error that the Carter administration made in 1977, setting back an arms control treaty for more than two years? When Jimmy Carter took office, he found a Soviet-American agreement waiting to become a treaty, negotiations for which were about 90 percent completed. Reached at Vladivostok between President Ford and Leonid Brezhnev, the agreement limited each side to 2,400 missile launchers, of which 1,320 would be allowed to carry multiple, independently targeted warheads. Difficult issues remained to be negotiated but it was generally believed that a new president would be able quickly to complete the treaty. Instead, Carter sent Cyrus Vance, his secretary of state, to Moscow with a new and more ambitious proposal to limit each side to 1,800 to 2,000 launchers, 1,100 to 1,200 of which could mount multiple warheads. The Soviets recoiled, charging the American side with abandoning the Vladivostok framework. Instead of quickly concluding a treaty, the Carter administration had to wait 27 months and go through further intensive negotiations before SALT II finally was signed in Vienna in June 1979 (never to be ratified by the Senate). Now Bush administration officials, having already irritated Moscow by delaying a new round of SALT talks, are reported to be discussing changes in the U.S. negotiating position established by the Reagan administration for SALT III. It's not clear whether such changes will be sought, and whether they are far-reaching enough to provoke the kind of Soviet displeasure the new Carter proposals encountered in 1977. But the precedent is ominous, as are reports of the Bush discussions. They apparently include a proposal to ban the Soviets' force of heavy SS-18 missiles altogether, rather than cutting it in half as agreed to by the Reagan administration's negotiators. The SS-18 is the largest rocket Moscow deploys; a U.S. proposal to ban it entirely might appear to the Soviets not only as reneging on an existing agreement but as a reach for unacceptable U.S. advantage. At the least, it might evoke Soviet demands for substantial, perhaps unwelcome concessions in return. Depending on their substance, of course, new U.S. positions might, instead, make it easier to reach an ultimate agreement. But Moscow is known to be wary of sudden shifts in negotiating approaches. As things now stand, only three major obstacles appear to be holding up SALT III. As outlined in a recent speech to the World Affairs Council of San Francisco by Sidney Drell, they are:

- How to improve U.S. land-based missile survivability.
- Verification of sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCMs).
- President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Bush administration has decided to deal with the first problem by shifting the 50 MX missiles now deployed in fixed silos to railroad flatcars, and by developing the single-warhead and truck-mobile Midgetman. The number of Midgetmen to be built has not been announced, or perhaps decided, but it seems likely to be the main U.S. land-based missile of the future. The MXs, each with 10 warheads, could be retired in an arms-control swap for the SS-24, the Soviets' 10-warhead rail-mobile missile. Drell proposed a compromise on the other issues: the U.S. would agree to honor the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in its traditional interpretation for 7 to 10 years, and the Soviets would drop demands for "unacceptably intrusive" means of verification of each side's SLCMs — a weapon Drell thinks too slow and too vulnerable. The most pressing need, in Drell's view, was to nail down the offensive force reductions already but tentatively agreed upon — "50 percent in the most threatening categories" of ballistic missile warheads, and about 30 percent in all categories. Those reductions would be too useful to jeopardize in last-minute grabs for more security or greater advantage. Wicker is a syndicated columnist for the New York Times News Service.

Apathy flares, fires back at top-billed news of day

Amy Lawson
News Writer

My brain is fried, my professors still are assigning homework and I could care less. Yes, I have an apathetic attitude, but guess what? You got it. I don't care.

Anyway, since I don't care about those things, I will tell you some more things I don't care about.

I don't care (get out Monday's UD) that it was Monday, May 1, 1989. I don't care that I didn't capitalize the "i" at the beginning of this sentence.

Why should I care that illegal inducements offered to Texas athletes are now under legislative fire? They are illegal, aren't they?

How about Atlanta's fuel system? If the components are faulty, they should be replaced. Don't you think? And if they were faulty, why were they on there in the first place?

New regent appointments? Why should I worry about that? I think after this year's regents the university will be able to survive anything.

Prostitution is the result of the lack of resources? Then why is prostitution still around? Looks like there are a lot of resources out there just waiting at the corner.

Thousands march on Capitol. Looks like they're going to need some repairs over there. Please wipe your feet before walking on the dome.

Looks like Bush needs a head start to get away from all the reporters on his case about his "active" first month in office. He sure did get a lot done.

Let's hope that Bush took the oath of the president's office, even though it may have just been a re-enactment. I wonder, could it have been a dramatization?

Can we really have a negative response to a survey? Does someone come in the middle of the night and steal all the surveys?

Page 4. Isn't that the whole purpose of a band — to emit sound? I wonder how many UH students who participated in the survey were over-age.

Why should I care that illegal inducements offered to Texas athletes are now under legislative fire? They are illegal, aren't they?

Page 5. What can you say about page 5, except who cares? Yes, I need a job, but I don't type, I'm not a junior or senior and I don't do restaurants.

Page 6. The day in sports. Tech shoots owls and then sweeps them away? I think we are going to have to talk to the Animal Rights Coalition about this.

Series to decide fourth place. I think "War and Remembrance" has had enough of a run, and I don't think it's for fourth place.

Wayland Baptist meet who? Raider women? I think we need to talk to these headline writers.

Evert ends win string? Sounds like the makings of a soap opera. Now let's return to Page 2, the omnibus opinion page.

Over the line? How about over the limit, overage, overreacting? And those wonderful letters, let's see ...

How about — column shows ignorance? Tickets have been sold out to this performance. Well, those are the things I do not care to think about.

Do you?

Text can defy translation

To the editor:

I am responding to Chuk Gill, the student who wonders why the administration requires that he take a foreign language. Perhaps the administration knows something that he doesn't know.

You said that you are here to learn about broadcasting. That implies you want to communicate with other people. How is learning to communicate in a language other than English going to hurt you in this respect? How will the ability to read literature (or traffic signs) in a foreign language hamper your ability to understand what you read in English?

Yes, you might say, but what's the use of it all? Of course! What's the use of reading Spanish history through the eyes of a Spaniard or reading a German classic novel in German? Why not just get the English translation?

Because it's not the same, that's why. This is not a trivial point. You cannot always translate foreign writings (literally) into English. In other words, the best way to appreciate a foreign work is to read it in its original language.

Really, though, this is all academic (no pun intended) anyway. Many people live happy lives without ever learning another language.

The fact remains, however, that most of us here are required to take a foreign language. Perhaps you've never heard the expression, "when given lemons, make lemonade," nor understood "en mal tiempo, bien cara."

Kudos to Rampage hosts

To the editor:

Please allow me to thank a few of your fine students. Brian Gordon and Cheryl Phillips were an ideal host and hostess during my first visit to the Tech campus. As a judge for the Raider Rampage program, my visit to the campus was short and busy, but Brian, Cheryl and my "guide," Chip Johnson, presented a high quality image of the university and its students.

Congratulations also to David Pope and those students involved with the production of Raider Rampage. This is a good collegiate production — one of the best among the others I've seen throughout the country. I hope the program continues to be a growing success.

Thank you, Brian and Cheryl, for your professionalism and attention to detail. You represented yourselves and your university well. And thanks for the tour, Chip.

I didn't mind at all going to the wrong hotel or to the dry cleaners to get your shirts.

Stats book doesn't add up

To the editor:

This is a letter in which I will enjoy writing ... mainly, because I will have the support of every business major at Texas Tech. The topic is ISQS 2445 ... better known as Statistics.

Of the four years I have been in college, I have never read a more poorly written book! To mention all the inadequacies would take too much space, but I will mention a few.

First, there are numerous mistakes throughout the book. I can remember back two years ago, when almost every class, the professor would correct the mistakes from the book ... just so I could maybe do my homework. Wasn't that considerate?

Did you rush your book to the press without proofreading it ... so you could make some money? Sounds like a scam to me! Second, although I realize the complexity of statistics, I do not think the material presented in the book is in its simplest form.

Unfortunately, it is obvious what is going on. The authors of the book are milking every dime they can from this book; and we students must pay the price! Is it a case of greed; or don't you want to change your "perfect system"? I certainly question your motives for not using a different book.

I personally feel it is because the department is too lazy, and won't go through the trouble of changing the system; and of course — personal greed.

All I ask is for each professor to step back and ask themselves, "Is this the best book we could give our students?"

I believe the answer would undoubtedly be no!

Why not make the ISQS department competitive among other top colleges? It really could be, but this book is one element that is holding it down.

Please, can't you transfer some of your self-pride into Texas Tech pride and change the book? I think you could, and besides, future students might learn something in the class!

Patrick Griffin

Culture broadens mind

To the editor:

I should address this to Chuk Gill.

Mr. Gill, your essay on the illegitimacy of foreign language studies in the Texas Tech curriculum strikes me as quite absurd. The university experience is a marketplace of ideas. Having exposure to a broad range of subjects increases one's appreciation of the world.

I enjoyed very much my time spent with the French language, conjugating verbs and tasting French culture, and not so much my time in the biology lab. Yet, Mr. Gill, in college, as in life, we must take the good with the bad.

Your narrow-minded attitude is not conducive to the educational process and is exactly what a university seeks to conquer.

Consider the word "university," and you will find that it is composed of the morpheme "diverse," which you probably did not know means varied; a variety.

Being from El Paso, you have a grounding in Spanish. Take that advantage and run with it. A little time with a Spanish text could easily garner you an A, and maybe you might learn something — an appreciation and respect for the language and culture.

If you have grown resentful of Spanish (with your attitude, I would not be surprised if that was the case), take a French, Chinese or Russian class. I have found the teaching assistants and professors in the foreign language department to be thoroughly knowledgeable, helpful and dedicated to their area of expertise.

An interdisciplinary liberal arts education is today quite de rigueur. If you do not like to study a plethora of information, perhaps a vocational-technical school could better meet your needs.

The foreign language department does not need people like you.

Poor editing mires UD

To the editor:

I am writing to the UD staff to protest the consistently poor editing of its articles. Throughout this entire year I have read articles in the paper containing misstated facts and inconsistencies throughout the articles. These two points are exhibited in the Lifestyles article on the U.S.S. Iowa that appeared on April 25.

The first point I wish to make is that the U.S.S. Iowa is NOT a destroyer, as stated in the article preview on page 1. There is no excuse for the incorrect fact, especially since the U.S.S. Iowa is referred to as a battleship, which it is, on page 5. Please get the facts straight.

The second point is an inconsistency in the headline for the article, "Iowa vet tells about other accidents."

In the second paragraph of the article the "Iowa vet" is identified as "... a young sailor working fire control aboard the destroyer — the U.S.S. William D. Porter." This man is a William D. Porter -vet, but not an Iowa vet. Please proofread AP articles so that your headlines will agree.

The UD is constantly scolding Tech students for having a negative self-image of our university. Perhaps if the UD staff would show enough pride to publish an accurate, correct paper, the self-image of Texas Tech would begin to improve.

Headmaster shares experiences

Tech student goes from sports spotlight to political machine

By CHRISTINE HANSON
Contributing Writer

A Texas Tech doctoral student has gone from basketball pro to personal aide of a former U.S. vice president and now to headmaster of a local private school.

Ken Bastian, headmaster of All Saints Episcopal School, said he enjoys his current position because it gives him the opportunity to share what he has learned with the students.

While working at All Saints, Bastian is working on his doctorate in education at Tech.

"Texas Tech is very practical and very helpful," Bastian said. "The best thing about the graduate school at Texas Tech is that it's the only school I've seen to use the holistic approach."

After Bastian receives his doctorate, he intends to return to Washington, D.C., before President Bush leaves the White House.

Bastian began his basketball career in Minnesota, where he twice was named high school basketball player of the year.

His excellence in the sport earned him a four-year basketball scholarship to Tulane University, where he earned his bachelor's degree in English.

He ended his basketball career after playing four years of professional basketball in Europe.

"I want all athletes to know I am equally as proud of the fact that I graduated with honors in English" as he is of his basketball accomplishments, he said.

Bastian's college degree opened doors for him in Washington, where he worked for George Bush, who was at the time vice president under Ronald Reagan.

Bastian started by volunteering to help the Bush presidential campaign as a phone bank assistant in 1979 in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He was placed in charge of a few precincts and later a few counties.

"All of a sudden my counties won," Bastian said. "I worked hard, but I can tell you that it was pure luck."

Based on his performance in Cedar Rapids, Bastian was asked to go to the headquarters in Washington to work on the national staff, where he began writing press releases for Bush.

Bastian stayed with Bush in the White House, first as assistant press secretary and later as deputy press secretary for domestic affairs.

"One of my most exciting moments was when I set up the meeting between the outgoing vice president, Mr. (Walter) Mondale, and the new vice president, Mr. Bush," Bastian said.

After staying with Vice President Bush for the first part of the term, Bastian said he felt he had reached a saturation point.

"I kind of got tired of working with the press by then," he said. "I felt like I had learned about as much as I was going to learn."

After serving as deputy director of the Peace Corps, Bastian attended Harvard University in the fall of 1981, where he received a master's degree in public administration.

Trouble rises like water at Lubbock Lake

By CORTCHIE WELCH
The University Daily

The water level at the Lubbock Lake Landmark — one of few national parks in the nation that contain relics of the past near a metropolis — rises a foot each year, endangering irreplaceable historical records.

Kenneth Rainwater, an assistant civil engineering professor at Texas Tech, said the problem of rising water can be attributed to the fact that wells are not being used to drain the site.

When Lubbock was merely a tiny trace on the world globe, Rainwater said, groundwater in the city intersected with water below the surface, creating a spring at the site.

In order to bring the water level down, he said, the city began to control the water supply with wells drilled in Yellow House Canyon.

"As they pumped water, the level fell below ground surface and dried up," said Rainwater, who also is affiliated with the Water Resources Center.

As the area dried, the city stopped drilling, Rainwater said, and began to use water from lakes leading out of Amarillo and Bailey County, once again causing the water level to rise above normal.

He said the problem of rising water also can be attributed to developmental practices.

"It is not like anybody did anything from negligence," Rainwater said. "It's just natural process being manipulated a little bit."

Eileen Johnson, a Tech museum curator and director of the lake site, said many valuable artifacts are located in the area underwater.

Johnson said the site is owned by the city of Lubbock, leased by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission and operated by Tech.

Johnson said officials from the museum, the mayor's office, local parks and wildlife representatives and the water resources department have presented a proposal to the wildlife commission.

The proposal indicates the number of wells needed and the location of wells that should be placed to drain the site.

Dwight Williford, who is in charge of master planning for Texas Parks and Wildlife, said the department has not finalized a decision to drain the lake but is in process of evaluating proposals.

Drowning prospect

Archeologists would like to see the Lubbock Lake Landmark either dry out in order to allow excavation of fossils or to remain flooded so the fossils would remain preserved, according to Kenneth Rainwater, a Texas Tech civil engineering assistant professor.

Bastian catches Olympic spirit

"I didn't want to be one of those guys who came to Washington and had a good smile, a quick handshake and all of the answers, so I went to Harvard," Bastian said.

After completing his studies at Harvard, Bastian returned to Washington in the fall of 1982 to serve under President Reagan as chief of staff to the 1983 economic summit in Williamsburg, Va. His duties ranged from working with the Secret Service to working with the delegates from the various countries and 3,000 members of the world press.

After the summit, Bastian said he had two alternatives: stay at the White House and work under David Gergen, who was, at the time, director of communications for the White House, or go to work for Peter Ueberroth, president of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

"It was a real tough choice," Bastian said. "But I felt that the chances of the Olympics ever coming to this country again, the summer Olympics particularly, would be distant at best."

Bastian chose to become director of government relations for the Olympic Committee, where his responsibilities included serving as Olympic liaison to Congress, the White House and foreign embassies.

Bastian said his most exciting moment was when he met with the sports advisory delegations from Romania and Yugoslavia, two countries that broke away from the Soviet bloc to enter the 1984 Summer Games.

"You could see the joy and smiles in the eyes and the faces of both delegations once they made the decision," Bastian said. "The athletes were just ecstatic. It was great."

After the end of the Summer Games, Bastian assisted media magnate Ted Turner in his "quest to bring all of the world's best athletes together from East to West for the first time since the Olympic Games in 1976." Bastian served as director of media and government relations for the 1986 Goodwill Games in Moscow.

Bastian, who has not yet reached his 40th birthday, said, "Anything is possible — as long as no one cares who gets the credit."

Lubbock has given much to reporter

Maria Hunt
Lifestyles
Writer

OK, I know I said in my last column that I was glad to be leaving Lubbock. I was not condemning the city, I was merely airing some complaints for lack of a better idea that day.

There are many things about Texas Tech and Lubbock that I appreciate and that I am very happy to have experienced and been involved in.

The University Daily, of course, has been a unique and wonderful experience in itself. The end of this semester may or may not be the end of my career in journalism, but I feel somewhat prepared for my future if an opportunity in journalism arises.

The Tech School of Music, where I spent many hours (but not enough) while working on my bachelor of arts degree in music, became a home away from home for me. The music building and all the people I learned from, worked with and made friends with there always will have a special place in my heart.

I always have considered the Tech library a friend because, although I didn't spend much time there, it always was there when I needed it and was an (almost) endless source of information.

Lubbock's classical music station, KOHM, has been a source of inspiration to me this semester. I volunteered a few hours of my time, and in return I was able to be part of a growing radio station that added to the cultural scene of Lubbock.

Last but definitely not least, being a member of the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra has given me the opportunity to perform with several outstanding conductors, play wonderful music and again to participate in a cultural activity that I hope will continue to bring pleasure to the Lubbock audience.

Disney World opens new Hollywood theme park

By The Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Disney-MGM Studios opened its $400 million theme park Monday, hoping to lure the nostalgic to its version of Hollywood's golden era and thrill-seekers to rides that will take them to places like Catastrophe Canyon.

The 135-acre complex blends filmmaking with backstage studio tours and ride-through, walk-through attractions. Movie and TV production began last summer on its three sprawling sound studios and backlot street scenes.

The new attraction on the entertainment giant's 43-square-mile Central Florida resort complements its other two theme parks: the Magic Kingdom and Epcot Center. It has its own admission fee: $29 for adults and $23 for children age 3 to 9.

Disney Chairman Michael Eisner and comedian Bob Hope were on hand to do the opening day honors on an outdoor stage in front of a recreation of Grauman's Chinese Theater on Hollywood Boulevard.

"It's the largest theme park run by actors, or cartoon characters, unless you want to count Washington, D.C.," joked Hope.

"The world you have entered was created by the Walt Disney Co. and is dedicated to Hollywood... a world that never was and always will be," Eisner told the crowd.

A Pennsylvania carpenter and his family led the way through the gates as the first visitors at the Florida attraction.

"We wanted to be first and beat the crowd but never expected anything like this," said Allan Gutierrez, 37, as he and his wife, two daughters and father-in-law strolled into the park.

"It's incredible," said Mary Gutierrez, 37, about their back-to-back appearances on national television and meetings with a gamut of Hollywood stars attending the grand-opening ceremonies.

Disney officials would not disclose attendance figures, but at least 15,000 were expected for opening day. Most attractions were crowded. Disney hopes to attract 3 million to 5 million visitors a year.

The grand opening followed a star-studded weekend of parties and previews for 3,000 journalists and family members, plus thousands of other invited guests.

About 40 movie and television stars attended a Saturday night gala and paraded down the park's Hollywood Boulevard in vintage automobiles Saturday night. Among them were Bette Midler, Lauren Bacall, George Burns, Audrey Hepburn, Betty White and Kevin Costner.

Major park features, in addition to the two-hour backstage tour, include the Great Movie Ride, the Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular theater show, Catastrophe Canyon, a Monster Sound Show and an Animation Center.

Breathed plans to end 'Bloom County'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Cartoonist Berke Breathed plans to discontinue his comic strip "Bloom County" on Aug. 6 and begin a new, Sunday-only strip the next month, according to an announcement from the Washington Post Writers Group.

The announcement, reported in Monday's edition of the Washington Post, quoted Breathed as saying, "A good comic strip is no more eternal than a ripe melon."

"Bloom County," featuring Opus the penguin and a cast of other characters from the fictional locale, quickly became one of the nation's most popular comic strips after its introduction in December 1980. It is carried now by almost 800 daily and college newspapers.

Breathed, 31, was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for distinguished cartooning in 1987.

In the announcement, Breathed said: "The ugly truth is that in most cases, comics age less gracefully than their creators. 'Bloom County' is retiring before the stretch marks show."

The cartoonist declined to comment beyond the prepared statement.

But William Dickinson, general manager and editorial director of the Writers Group, which distributes "Bloom County," said Breathed had been considering such a move for about a year.

"This was not an impetuous decision on Berke's part," Dickinson said.

"He thinks the strip may be past its peak in some way, which isn't true, but that's his decision."

Dickinson declined to give details about the new strip planned by Breathed. "It will have a different name," he said. Asked if any of the "Bloom County" characters might appear in the new strip, he said, "Apparently not, with maybe one exception."

He declined to elaborate.

Due to the cancellation of "Bloom County," The University Daily is asking for suggestions from readers as to what comic strip to replace "Bloom County" with for the fall semester. Please bring a written suggestion to the UD newsroom in 210 journalism building.

Student makes most of hearing disability

By KRISTI GOODWIN
Contributing Writer

For Paige Heaton, a Texas Tech freshman from Kress, all it took was a little patience, love and support from her family and friends to get to where she is today.

Heaton was born with a total hearing loss. Her parents gave her support and encouragement to live and talk in the "hearing world," which sometimes is taken for granted by many people. She now is at Tech for her first semester at a large university.

"I feel lucky because my mom was so patient with me," Heaton said. "She encouraged me to learn to talk and to not depend so much on sign language."

Heaton's mother, Betty Reed, recalls her daughter's childhood and the search for a treatment program. "When she was little, we started investigating by talking to many people," she said. "Some told us about many different methods, but the oral type seemed to be the most popular back then."

Heaton began speech therapy when she was 2 years old at the Amarillo Speech and Hearing Center in Amarillo. Heaton and her family lived in Amarillo until they moved to Kress when she was a third grader.

"We just decided that this particular program was the way we wanted her to go," Reed said. "There were not that many deaf people around. In fact, Paige was the only one we knew of or had ever known at the time. We thought it would be best because they said sign language was so easy to learn, and if she had learned sign language first, she might not have made an effort to talk."

Reed said her daughter's only handicap was her deafness and that it was easier for her to be able to learn to talk. "Now it seems more children are being born with multiple handicaps, so it's harder for them to just be oral. They need to be able to use sign language also," she said.

Having supportive teachers and parents, Heaton was able to do just about everything a person her age, with hearing, could do. She went to regular schools and was even a cheerleader her senior year in high

Allen Ross/The University Daily

Hands-off learning

Heaton, a freshman undecided major also from Kress, who reads lips and does not have to rely upon sign language.

school. Heaton's family was supportive of her going to college as well.

"She has always wanted to go, and we always felt like she really could," Reed said.

Heaton has many personal qualities, including an articulate speaking voice, which make her life at college a little easier. Her roommate in Horn Hall, Stacy Weatherred, a junior human development major from Kress, agrees. "A lot of our friends thought that she was not deaf when they first met her," she said.

Heaton's ability to combine the use of her two hearing aids and being able to read lips, even from the side, has helped her communicate almost perfectly with parents, friends and teachers.

But certain conditions are required for Heaton to function at a large university. She does have to sit either in the front row or close to it in every class, and she has a student in each class take notes for her using a duplicate notepad. She even makes an effort to visit her teachers before each class just to make sure she's on the right track.

"Sometimes in class I think I understand what my teachers want but it turns out I really didn't understand at all," Heaton said. "That seems to be the only real problem I have."

Even though there are rough times for Heaton at college, her friends and her roommate think she is doing quite well. "I think she has adapted well to college life," Weatherred said. "She is a great roommate and fun to talk to. Most of the time I don't even think of her as being deaf."

Since Weatherred and Heaton have been good friends for years, they are able as roommates to laugh at the comical events of college life.

When Heaton drives her car, she likes to listen to the radio and can distinguish between country music and rock 'n' roll. "One time I got into the car with her and she thought she was listening to one kind of station but it turned out she was listening to a Hispanic station and she didn't even know it!" Weatherred recalled.

Even though Weatherred and Heaton go day by day with small adjustments, Heaton's mother said she is thankful that Weatherred is there for Heaton.

"Stacy has been wonderful for her," Reed said. "It's nice for me because I can call Stacy on the telephone and she can call me. It would've been more difficult to communicate with Paige had her roommate been a stranger."

Heaton said she also is thankful for her roommate, as well as the overall college experience and the opportunities that are available for her. In the future, Heaton said, she wants other people with hearing losses to know they too can get the most out of life instead of choosing an isolated one behind sign language or away from the "hearing world."

Station set to begin second fund-raiser

By TRACY THOMASON
The University Daily

Today marks one year of operation for Lubbock's classical music station KOHM-FM, located in the journalism building on the Texas Tech campus.

The station, which was 10 years in planning, will begin a second four-day fund-raising and membership drive on Thursday. The fund-raiser provides almost the entire yearly operating budget for the station, which gets no financial support from Tech with the exception of office space free from rent and paid utilities.

The first fund-raising drive, one year ago, generated $50,000 for the station, which had been on the air only for a few days.

The goal of "RADIOTHON '89," the title of this year's drive, is $75,000, said Myra McNeil, KOHM-FM's operations manager.

The pledge drive will take place Thursday through Sunday.

Live performances by more than 25 local artists, including William Westney of the Tech music school and the Tech Baroque Ensemble, will be featured during the drive along with many local celebrities performing as guest hosts for the station. Scheduled to guest-host shows are Gene Hemmle, Lubbock Mayor B.C. "Peck" McMinn, Gail Littleton, Bishop Michael Sheehan of the Lubbock Catholic diocese and Maestro Gurer Aykal of the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra.

"I am so excited about the enthusiasm of Lubbock listeners," said McNeil.

East Texas PIs try hand at 'Miami Vice'

By The Associated Press

LONGVIEW — It's the stuff of television police shows — small town private eyes track down stolen merchandise and wind up in the big city of Miami, where they encounter drug dealers, pimps, prostitutes, and contracts put out on their lives.

All the elements were there for a first-rate crime story, but for Longview private investigators Barry Higginbotham and Jimmy Lancaster fiction became reality.

Higginbotham and Lancaster flew back to Longview last week from Florida with about $110,000 worth of movie sound equipment, which was stolen from a moving van parked at a Longview motel in October.

The theft was similar to several others recently investigated by Longview police Detective Roy Bean, in which a theft ring would cruise Interstate 20 at night looking for moving vans parked at motels. Once a van was spotted, the thieves would hot-wire the truck, drive it to an isolated area of East Texas and steal its contents.

According to Higginbotham, the sound equipment was stolen from Vestron Pictures of Stamford, Conn. He said the movie crew had finished filming the movie "Little Monsters" in North Carolina and was headed back to California for editing when they stopped overnight in Longview.

"The next morning one of the guys walked out and found their truck gone," Higginbotham said. "The truck was later found down around Henderson, but all the stuff, about $637,000 worth of sound equipment, costumes, puppets and other stuff, was gone."

Hays says season's end 'fitting'

By JOEL WEST
The University Daily

Texas Tech baseball coach Larry Hays said Monday he is glad his team is in a position to make the Southwest Conference Post-Season Tournament field and added that the challenge the Red Raiders face against Houston is quite fitting to end the regular season.

Then-No. 3 Texas A&M dropped one game to the Cougars on Saturday, forcing the Raiders to win two of three at Houston on May 12-13.

"They (the Aggies) have been rough on us all season long," Hays said. A&M pounded the Raiders in three games to open the SWC season.

"They (the Aggies) could have helped us over the weekend, but they didn't. But that all fits. Nothing this season has been easy. If we do happen to make the tournament, it will just fit what this season has been like."

After losing their first nine SWC contests, the Raiders have won 10 of their last 13 games. Included in that stretch were SWC series wins over Baylor, TCU and Rice, the latter two of which were sweeps at Dan Law Field.

"Back when we were 18-5, I was foolish enough to think we'd be solid all year long," Hays said. "But our guys have really come together and come on strong lately."

Hays said he is not convinced the Raiders' late fortunes will translate into a SWC tournament berth, however.

"We've been to this point two or three times this season and — all of the sudden — one thing goes wrong, and we go out there and make eight errors," he said.

Hays praised last week's performances by right-hander James Mauldin, who picked up two wins and a save, but refused to name a starter for the third game against Houston.

"I think I'm going to pick the guy I like least," he jokingly said.

"Mauldin came out there and gave us something," Hays said. "That third starter — I don't know what it is about it — but it's cursed."

Kyle Guerry opened the third game for Tech but was pulled after surrendering three runs in 2/3 inning. Mauldin entered and held Rice to two runs on three hits in 5 1/2

Ryan helps Rangers cap April with lead

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — It was the most amazing April in the Texas Rangers' 17-year history.

George W. Bush, the oldest son of the president, and Rusty Rose III couldn't have picked a better time to buy the club from Eddie Chiles.

Texas finished the month with a major league best 17-5 record, capping it in dramatic style Sunday when Nolan Ryan beat the Boston Red Sox's Roger Clemens 2-1 in a stirring mound duel.

A crowd of 40,429 jammed into Arlington Stadium. The weekend series against the Red Sox attracted 116,919, most ever for the Rangers in a three-game series.

Texas already has drawn 330,740 fans in 11 dates, 67,531 ahead of last year's pace.

With new talented players and strikeout king Ryan's drawing power, the Rangers already have put an extra $500,000 in the bank after the first month of the season.

The Rangers had back-to-back sellouts against Boston, the first in the club's history.

Scalpers appeared for the first time in Rangers' history during the series, asking as much as $200 for four tickets to the Ryan-Clemens duel.

Texas never has won a division pennant, but after the Rangers beat Clemens on Rafael Palmeiro's two-run, eighth-inning home run, fans left Arlington Stadium chanting "Rangers, Rangers, First Place, First Place."

Texas has been in first place in the American League West since the season started. Going into Monday night's game against Cleveland, Texas led defending AL champion Oakland by one game.

Ryan was clocked at 95 mph and Clemens was timed at 96 mph in a classic duel between a Texan and an adopted Texan who live only 40 miles apart in the southern part of the state.

Ryan wild-pitched a run home in the first inning and thought he'd had it.

"You don't make mistakes against a pitcher like Clemens and get away with it," Ryan said.

Sports Briefs

Carlesimo decides Seton Hall is home

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — Despite overtures from Kentucky, Seton Hall basketball coach P.J. Carlesimo ended a week of soul-searching Monday by deciding to stay at the school he took to the NCAA championship game.

"He's staying," said John Paquette, Seton Hall's assistant athletic director.

Carlesimo met with six returning players for about three minutes in the team's locker room Monday to tell them the news.

He was not immediately available to meet with reporters, but he released a statement through Paquette.

"The strong desire that I have to continue this relationship would not allow me to leave Seton Hall," Carlesimo said. "I am extremely comfortable living in the (New York) metropolitan area, competing in the Big East, and I am certain no other environment would be as attractive to me."

Carlesimo had been mulling a possible move to Kentucky since visiting the Lexington campus April 24 for more than a day of interviews.

The Wildcats are trying to replace Eddie Sutton, who resigned under pressure in the wake of an NCAA investigation into alleged violations in the basketball program.

The 39-year-old coach also turned down the opportunity for a job that pays about $600,000 a year and is one of the most prestigious in college.

NSCA names Thurman to strength team

The National Strength Coaches Association in Lincoln, Neb., has named former Texas Tech wide receiver Tyrone Thurman to the first team All-America Strength Team.

Thurman is the first athlete from Tech to be named to the squad, according to Tech strength and conditioning coach Joe Juraszek.
