House overrides Bush's veto of Chinese student deportation bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to override President Bush's veto of legislation protecting Chinese students from deportation, while Bush appealed to Republican senators to resist and help him keep open ties to the world's most populous nation.
The House vote of 390-25 sent the matter to the Senate, where both sides said the outcome of today's scheduled vote was in doubt.
House Speaker Thomas S. Foley declared, "I don't think what's most on the minds of the members of Congress is the sensitivities of the present Chinese leadership. ... This is a leadership that has in our judgment failed to respect the rights of its own citizens."

"On the issue of China, the president has lost his credibility," said Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Asia subcommittee.
Bush pinned his hopes on the Senate, where both Democratic and Republican senators predicted a cliffhanger. The president, National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and Secretary of State James A. Baker III all were telephoning senators through the day.

Bush was publicly appealing to GOP senators to support him in the face of what he termed "crass politics" played by some supporters of the override.
The legislation would affect as many as 32,000 Chinese students now in the United States on "exchange visitor" visas. The bill would waive a legal requirement that those students return home for two years after their visas expire before returning to the United States or going elsewhere.

In addition, the bill would permit any Chinese student whose visa has expired — as many as 8,000 others — to remain in the United States as long as danger exists at home, and would allow Chinese students to work while in this country.
Bush vetoed the measure on Nov. 30 after it had passed unanimously in the House and by a voice vote in the Senate. Chinese student groups have lobbied hard for an override of the veto, saying many of them would face political persecution at home because they supported the pro-democracy demonstrations that brought a violent government crackdown last June.

At the time Bush vetoed the bill, he ordered government agencies to adopt what he contends are essentially the same safeguards. The veto was simply an effort to preserve executive branch foreign policy prerogatives, he said, and to keep open the door for future student and cultural exchanges.
"I will not break faith with the Chinese students here. ... They were safe then, and they are safe now, and they will be safe in the future," Bush told a White House news conference Wednesday.

To the 37 GOP senators who attended a breakfast at the White House, Bush hit hard on his contention that a veto override would mean a total cutoff of the flow of students to the United States, and he appeared to be winning a few converts.
"The price of the Pelosi bill is lost opportunity for the Chinese scholars of tomorrow," the president told reporters later, referring to the legislation sponsored by Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

Gorilla shuffle

Bush expresses support for Gorbachev's survival

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush expressed hope Wednesday that Mikhail S. Gorbachev "not only survives but stays strong" in the face of "enormous" problems. He declined comment on whether the Soviet leader has gone too far in trying to quell civil strife in Azerbaijan.
"Anytime you have a use of force and the loss of life, we are concerned. But I don't believe I can judge that question right now," said Bush of the Soviet crackdown on rioting in the largely Moslem Soviet republic.
The president, at a news conference, also announced support for elevating the Environmental Protection Agency to the Cabinet, castigated a "sleight-of-hand" plan to cut Social Security taxes and mounted a last-ditch effort to prevent an override of his veto of a bill protecting Chinese students from deportation.
Gorbachev ordered thousands of Soviet troops into Azerbaijan last week to stop anti-Armenian rioting and restore order. The military killed dozens of people Saturday in storming the capital city of Baku. After 11 days of violence, the official death toll stood at 170.
With the strife in Azerbaijan and demands for independence from the Baltic states of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, Bush said Gorbachev is "faced with an ethnic problem here and an internal problem of enormous dimensions."

Bush said he "can't make predictions" about Gorbachev's chances of surviving the challenges, but added: "I hope he not only survives but stays strong. Because I think it is in our interest that perestroika succeed and go forward."
The United States regards the Soviet Union's annexation of the Baltic states a half-century ago as illegal, and Bush said he and Gorbachev discussed the U.S. position at last month's Malta summit.
But he said he did not want "to fine-tune all that," emphasizing instead that what "we want to do is to encourage Mr. Gorbachev's stand that peaceful change is the order of the day."
Bush called Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan's idea of a rollback in the Social Security tax "a disguise for increased taxes around the corner." He called it "odd that a Republican president ... is the one that is protecting the sanctity of the Social Security benefits."
But Bush also said a proposal by conservative House Republicans to allow workers to shift part of their payroll taxes into private retirement accounts "has some interesting ingredients" and is worthy of study.

President to unveil second phase of strategy for drug war today

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The second phase of the National Drug Control Strategy, to be unveiled today by President Bush, will call for spending more than $10 billion on the war against drugs in 1991, at least $1.2 billion more than this year, sources said Wednesday.
Money for the Pentagon's effort to battle drugs would rise about 50 percent, from $880 million this year to $1.2 billion in fiscal 1991, a draft of the strategy said.
Congress has allocated about $8.8 billion for the drug war this fiscal year, about $900 million more than the $7.9 billion sought by Bush in the strategy unveiled last September.

The new strategy will also intensify federal anti-drug efforts in five areas immediately, said the sources, all of whom requested anonymity.
Those areas — metropolitan New York, Miami, Houston, Los Angeles and virtually all of the Southwest border — will be designated as high-intensity drug-trafficking regions and will benefit this year from $25 million previously approved by Congress to fight drugs in the worst-afflicted regions and from as much as $21 billion from the federal asset-forfeiture fund, the sources said.

By and large, the strategy's focus will remain as it was in the original plan:
• Harsh, state-imposed penalties for drug users.
• Intensified treatment and prevention efforts.
• Bigger budgets for law enforcement at all levels.
One source said that the targeting of five areas in the war against drugs this year will not mean more money for local governments.
Those governments "won't see any checks," said the source. "What they will see is increased awareness and cooperation from the feds, that type of thing. The money is going to the feds for them to increase their efforts ... to highlight their presence in those areas."

The federal anti-drug effort will also target regions surrounding designated cities, the source said.
He said the Los Angeles metropolitan area will include Los Angeles and Orange County.
A draft of the strategy says the New York area includes Nassau County in New York and Orange and Essex counties in New Jersey.
The Miami area includes Broward, Dade and Monroe counties. The Houston area includes Harris and Galveston counties.
The Southwest region includes 35 counties in California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Soviets clash with Azerbaijani nationalists at port of Baku

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet forces Wednesday fought with Azerbaijani nationalists who blockaded the port of Baku with oil tankers to protest the government's military occupation of their war-torn republic, news reports said.
Soviet television reported that nationalists aboard the tankers attacked a marine passenger terminal in the harbor, where people wait to board ships.
"There was an exchange of fire," a television report said, and soldiers were wounded. It gave no further details of the harbor battle except to say that a group of people was detained later. Residents in Baku said in telephone interviews that they had heard there was a 40-minute gun battle in the harbor.

Tass reported that the blockade of the port by Azerbaijani extremists, which had lasted several days, had been lifted. However, it was not clear whether the nationalists had chosen to end it or had been forced to do so.
Before the battle, the captains aboard the tankers in the oil-producing Caspian Sea port had threatened to blow up their vessels if the Soviet military tried to break the blockade, an activist said.

KTXT-TV manager discusses station's expansion

By CONNIE SWINNEY
The University Daily

Quality, educational programming and improved technical standards have propelled KTXT-TV through three decades of developing and expanding an innovative broadcasting channel, the station manager says.
"Our programs have developed a real following among viewers of all ages in our community with programming such as drama, music and documentaries," said station manager John Henson, who also is associate director of continuing education for telecommunications.
KTXT-TV, an affiliate of the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) on Channel 5, gains most recognition from children's programming, Henson said, but the station continues to expand as PBS provides more well-rounded educational features.

"They have developed in-depth news programs such as the 'MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour,'" he said. "Although you see news programs growing on commercial television, for awhile you didn't see it at all."
KTXT-TV offers nature and science programming such as "Nova," "Nature" and "National Geographic."
"These programs appeal to a very broad community," Henson said. "While these programs have been around for some time, we continue to see these programs develop and get better each year."
KTXT-TV is licensed by the Federal Communications Commission through Texas Tech, and the station performs many services for academic departments.

"We respond to the needs of the departments," he said. "We also have an obligation to serve the needs of the community. We take care to balance duties between those obligations."
The station provides copies of programs to departments to supplement classroom activities, he said. The station also has conducted credit courses in the past for various departments.
"We've had an ongoing relationship with the mass communications department," he said. "We hire students to operate the board and to act as part-time engineers in the evenings and weekends."
For Tech students involved in a degree associated with public television, the station helps with practicum courses by allowing the students to participate with production work, Henson said.
"We have exchanged equipment during joint projects with the department that benefited both the station and the mass communications department," he said.

As more people begin to watch public television, the station becomes more sensitive to the needs of viewers, Henson said.
"We're becoming more responsive and becoming more involved in technical applications to enhance delivery, with more involvement in teleconferencing activity," he said.
"We continue to want, with the use of community and university resources, to produce a great deal of public affairs programming. We've worked with the youth corps, and we deal with questions about the drug problem and teen-age pregnancy in a program called 'Take Five.'"
KTXT-TV began broadcasting in 1962.

U.S. needs to re-evaluate Latin American policy

Guy Lawrence
Editor

Now that the Soviet Union continues to struggle for its own survival with in its own borders, the United States can begin to focus on another region of the world: Latin America.

The American government always has considered Latin America to be its own back yard. Yet in most cases it has neglected the care and upkeep of its own back yard only to respond drastically when it was too late.

The Yankees, as we are so fondly referred to by our neighbors from the south, have taken action in the name of democracy and friendship continuously ever since we proved ourselves as a world power by winning the Spanish-American war.

President Johnson sent the U.S. Marines into the Dominican Republic to restore order to nations whose government was on the brink of a violent overthrow.

President Taft sent the Marines in to Nicaragua early in the century to protect American assets. Eventually the intervention led to the rise of a tyrant named Somoza, whose family would continue to rule, whether in office or not, until the 1979 revolution.

President Kennedy imposed a naval blockade of Cuba and then gave assistance to the failed Bay of Pigs invasion.

President Reagan took credit for his own invasion of Grenada, and his successor, President Bush, has his own medal to wear for his invasion of Panama.

In the early 1950s the United States administration orchestrated a successful coup against Guatemala's Arbenz government. Guatemala continues to be an oppressive government against its large Indian population.

A legacy of U.S. intervention is the continued effort of the American government to violently overthrow the Sandinista government. All this could come to an end one way or another if the Sandinistas win and the elections are fraud-free. The United States then will be hard-pressed to justify funding the Contras and will come under great pressure to disarm them — something that will not come easy.

San Salvador has come under new pressure recently to prove its human rights reforms are real by attempting to prosecute eight military men, including one colonel, for the deaths of six Jesuit priests, a woman and her daughter. It will not be an easy attempt, seeing that the government is heavily influenced by the military and that the ruling party itself has past ties with the infamous death squads that used to act without fear of prosecution.

In South America, the United States is preparing to pump $2.2 billion into the Andean region in its continued international drug war. The upcoming summit is expected to concentrate on a military solution to the drug peddlers since the program of crop eradication has failed. It must be difficult for a country like Peru to be overly concerned with the impact on drugs on America while its own economy is in chaos.

Colombia's President Virgilio Barco will step down in May if his party does not throw him out before then. Barco was successful in taking a hard line against the drug cartel, but if his people don't see his fight, which has caused chaos in his country, as successful, the next president may decide not to fight at all.

It seems that U.S. policy has been too little, too late, in Latin America. The United States may not be the answer to the problems of our neighbors to the south, but I wonder if we sometimes are the problem.

UD cartoon stinks

To the editor:

I would like to congratulate The University Daily on reaching a new level of ignorance with its cartoonist's "commemoration" of the 17th anniversary of Roe vs. Wade in Monday's edition. You have once again succeeded in insulting the intelligence of every man and woman on this campus who believes in the fundamental right of each person to control his or her own destiny (which as you are obviously unaware, makes up the vast majority over a few narrow-minded, loud-mouthed zealots.) Fortunately, the pro-choice majority maintains a position far above the violent and gory scare tactics to which the small minds of the anti-choice minority have resorted to many times. The offensive actions of the anti-choice minority, which range from ridiculous cartoons to violent attacks on pregnant women, speak for themselves. With people like this on their team, the anti-choice movement can continue to dig its own grave.

Hope forever lost...

To the editor:

Dear Art,
Recently, I was in Dad's condo in Colorado. As I was perusing a list of Mommy and Daddy's assets, I heard an anguished cry from outside. I ran to the window and looked down. Through the gently falling snow, just past the Range Rover and the Beemer, I could make out the lone figure of a man in the street. He wasn't dressed very well, and I knew this was in violation of the deed restrictions for this neighborhood. I ran outside to confront the ne'er-do-well.

Others had heard his shouts and were coming as well. Keeping my lower jaw as locked as possible, I spoke to the man.

"Dear fellow, don't you know there is a strictly enforced dress code in this neighborhood? Heavens, man, you didn't even drive up in your European import. Leave at once or I'll have Dad fax you a threatening letter."

The man spoke. "Despair, all. Chaos has rooted itself within the very firmament of heaven. Men are bereft of their reason. The hope that gives man faith is forever lost. From this day forward, the icy embrace of the grave will be a comfort to which all will look forward. Such are the rewards when the state of man has deteriorated to such a condition that Art is not given the grade he believes he deserves."

All stood in stunned silence. Slowly, the crowd dispersed. Most were in tears, despondent, refusing to believe what they had heard. But in their hearts, now weighted with a nearly unbearable burden, they knew the dreadful message of the stranger was true.

I walked back to Dad's condo, silently, trying to hold back the tears. I had to hurry out of the frigid January air, knowing it could damage my frail skin, not to mention dry out my dainty hands. And yet I stopped and looked up into the night sky, wondering if the stars would remain. I hesitated, fearing the truth. Would there be a void in the skies as well?

Would the void now appearing before me, yawning open, black and beckoning on this fragile earth, envelop the skies as well? The stars remained, yet they were of little comfort. Art didn't get the grade he thought he deserved. I dropped to my knees. "God in heaven, not Art!" I cried. My humble prayer seemed empty, as did my heart. For the first time in my fashionable, pampered life, I actually questioned the existence of God. I had never felt such despair. I heard the words over and over again; Art did not get the grade he thought he deserved.

Art, you state that you came up a "few points short" of the grade you desired. You may be lacking points in other areas as well. Art, Mommy and Daddy don't own a condo in Colorado, nor do they vacation in the Caribbean, simple for rest and relaxation. They are willing to make such great expenditures in order to get away from you, Art. This, however, is a luxury not afforded to those of us at Tech who must endure your trite, inane whining.

You mention this purported "paper" you did for an extra point. You wrote a paper in one hour? I hope you were able to work in some verbs here and there, perhaps an adjective or two as well. Heaven knows, if anything deserves an extra point, it is a paper thoroughly researched and written in one hour.

Concerning your "family lawyer," I would make a suggestion. First, tell your lawyer to do a little research in something called "Public Education Law." Then have him explain "hearsay" and "swearing match." Then get gear old Dad to fire him. The court will either send you back through the administrative process, or they will kick you out of court.

Grow up, Art. Spend the time working on your personality (or perhaps acquiring one.) In the technical vernacular of psychologists, I believe the complex is known as "sniveling mama's boy syndrome." You turned a letter concerning a legitimate complaint into the paltry bleatings of a snotty rich boy compelled to call attention to the purported wealth of his family. It's time you utilized some of that maturity you mentioned. You've been through the administrative process, and you lost. Fax Dad (wherever he may be wintering) and have him get his new lawyer to draw up a time-share agreement on a shoulder for you to cry on. Then move on, Art, but do it quietly.

Benjamin A. Armstrong

Not for Art's sake

To the editor:

Art Carpenter's letter of the 22nd was a real eye-opener. You have to feel for the guy, what with his being oppressed and all.

Aside from being hard to relate to someone who is obviously so destitute financially, I also find it hard to have much sympathy for someone who can't seem to muster the wherewithal to complete course requirements on time and as specified by an instructor at the beginning of the semester. I teach a couple of sections in the English department myself, and I am amazed every semester at how many students are under the impression that they can save an entire semester of goofing around by one last herculean effort for extra credit.

Maybe Carpenter is right, and his instructor did tell him one thing and then do another. That's not right, and I suppose Carpenter ought to feel a little miffed about it.

But here's the point: If he'd done what he was supposed to do from the beginning of the term, he wouldn't have had this problem. Not everything is someone else's fault, Art. Not everything is for Art's sake.

Errant patriots merit hearings

William Safire
Columnist

WASHINGTON — "Noriega is not a partner of mine," said Michael Harari, a former Israeli intelligence officer, to a television interviewer in Jerusalem. "I did not supervise or train his forces. I did not organize his personal guard. I am simply a private individual involved in business."

Because Harari served as the former strongman's "honorary consul," his protestations are widely disbelieved. A leftist member of the Knesset said last week: "There is no doubt that Harari was Noriega's right-hand man, and we had to check if Noriega laundered drug money also with his right hand."

When the United States sent its consensual intervenors into Panama last month, Harari was high on the arrest list. Despite an embassy announcement of his capture, he slipped home to Israel to denounce "disinformation" about his past.

Much of his Mossad past was surely heroic. He avenged the murder of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics by leading a hit team that killed a dozen Black September terrorists, unfortunately including an innocent Arab; he infiltrated Idi Amin's Uganda to advance the rescue of hostages at Entebbe; then he became the Mossad's key man in Central America, harassing aid to PLO terrorists by Cuba and Nicaragua.

In the mid-1980s, he apparently retired from espionage to go into business for himself. What does a former hit man, counterterrorist and clandestine border-crosser do for a living? We ought to be able to find out.

The Israeli government, dutifully following the zigs and zags of U.S. diplomacy in Central America — which swung from Noriega as paid CIA agent to Noriega as despised drug-runner — disclaimed all responsibility for Mike Harari's private actions in support of the defiant dictator.

The first issue: How much responsibility does a nation have for the acts of its nationals abroad? Every country has its wrongdoers; does the United States have to apologize for American racketeers abroad?

To an extent, yes. The obligation of the home country is to cooperate in the prosecution of its errant nationals, within human rights limitations, especially when those nationals run home for cover. Should a U.S. grand jury want to interrogate Harari, or if a warrant is issued, the government of Israel is duty-bound to help produce or apprehend him.

But what if the suspect is a kind of hero — an Ollie North or a Rafi Eytan? What if he knows too much about national secrets, and if his arrest abroad might compromise the security sources of his country of origin?

Now we're in the gray area in which governments are so susceptible to graymail. We recently set a bad precedent by bowing to the threat of a CIA operative to reveal secrets in defending himself; suddenly, in the Noriega case, that weight of embarrassment seems not controlling.

All nations with extensive intelligence services and anti-terrorist teams are faced with a growing menace of renegades and retirees — men trained to circumvent the local law, who are coming in from the cold to cash in on their experience.

The answer should be a tough-minded one taken from the organized underworld: You can never retire from the Service. Whatever you do after you leave must have the written approval of the government in which you served.

But don't even spies have rights? Fewer than other people. Those who choose the espionage life give up many of their freedoms, regularly permitting the most demeaning searches of their brains and blood. They should be told at the start that their expertise is a public asset, never for sale without permission.

Both the United States and Israel are led by men who headed their nation's intelligence arm. Israel, the object of unrelenting terrorist warfare, has been forced to train some of its citizens to carry out terrible work. Other democratic nations, too, have trained agents to do necessary work that is considered dirty.

Those so trained who are patriots will accept the lifelong responsibility to reflect only credit on their country; those who turn adventurers and soldiers of misfortune deserve not only prosecution but the contempt of the service they disgrace.

Symposium to feature distinguished poet

By HEATHER SCHAIBLE
The University Daily

Writers and distinguished guests from all over the United States will contemplate the world's political changes during a three-day comparative literature symposium at Texas Tech titled "The Literature of Emigration and Exile."

The 23rd annual symposium will feature Carolyn Forché, an internationally renowned poet, as the keynote speaker. She is the author of The Country Between Us and Gathering the Tribes. Forché will discuss "The Poet's Response to Emigration and Exile" at 7 p.m. today in 202 business administration building.

The symposium will include panel sessions in the special collections room of the Tech Library. The first session will begin at 2 p.m. today with Dolora Wojciehowski, an assistant English professor at the University of Texas at Austin. She will speak on "Petrarch's Temporal Exile and the Wound's of History." Immediately following, Shoshanah Dietz, a Germanic languages instructor at UT-Austin, will discuss "The Bitter Air of Exile: First Wave Russian Emigrant Poetry and the Berlin Experience."

From 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. today,

Carolyn Forché

panel discussions dealing with Latin American literature and exile will feature Linda Hollabaugh, an assistant Spanish professor at Midwestern State University, speaking on Daniel Moyano's "Libro de navios y borascas: The Expression of Territorial Exile." Also, John Inledon, an associate Spanish professor at Albright College in Pennsylvania, will speak on "Parricide and Exile: Tracing Derrida in 'Yo, el Supremo,' by Augusto Roa Bastos."

The symposium will resume at 8:30 a.m. Friday with Mary Vasquez, an instructor at Michigan State University, speaking on "Family, Generation and Gender in Two Novels of Cuban Exile: Into the Mainstream?" Immediately following, Robert Graybill, an English professor at Central Missouri State University, will speak on "American Lyric: The Exilic Mind."

A panel from 10:30 a.m. to noon Friday will feature Janet Perez, Tech Horn professor of Spanish, who will present "Paradigms of Exile in Donoso's Spanish Fiction." Frances Hernandez, an English professor at the University of Texas at El Paso, will discuss "Two European Exiles: Stefan Zweig and Ramon Sender."

Diane Wood, a Tech associate French professor, will give the 12:30 p.m. luncheon address Friday in the Lubbock Room of the University Center, focusing on "Atwood and Bradbury: Exile as Rational Decision."

From 2 p.m. to 3:15 p.m. Friday, speakers will discuss Eastern European writers in exile. Robert Newman, an associate English professor at State University of New York at Buffalo, will discuss "The Reader of Exile: Skvorecky's Engineer of Human Souls." Judith Dompkowski, an associate English professor at Canisius College in New York, will present "The Artistic Fabric of a Poet in Exile."

Following, two literary experts will examine how American writers have responded to exile and emigration. Allen Hibbard will present "American Expatriate Communities in Wharton and James." Hibbard recently returned from a four-year sojourn in Egypt, where he taught at the American University in Cairo. Jefferson Faye will discuss "Cultural/Familial Estrangement: Self-Exile and Self-Destruction in Jay McInerney's Novels." Faye is a doctoral candidate at the University of Cincinnati, where he specializes in post-modern American literature.

The final day of the symposium will begin at 8:30 a.m. Saturday with Shumei Shih, a doctoral student in comparative literature at the University of California in Los Angeles. She will discuss "Exile and Intertextuality in Maxine Hong Kingston's 'China Men.'"

The symposium is organized and directed by Tech's interdepartmental committee on comparative literature. Registration for the symposium costs $20. Student admission is free. For more information, call 742-2501.

Program gives students taste of college classes

By HEATHER SCHAIBLE
The University Daily

Derald Walling, a Texas Tech mathematics professor, brings the math world alive for kids from area high schools and junior high schools.

TTU/GTE-PREP is designed for high ability pre-college students who are interested, or think they might be interested, in a business, engineering, mathematics or science career. Participants will have a chance to discuss opportunities with guest speakers who are experts in their prospective fields and who explain their research.

Assignments and examinations are given, and all participants are expected to do the work required to maintain a 70 average in the program. Participants live off campus but are involved in classes, seminars and research from 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. The program begins June 11 and continues through Aug. 3. No tuition or fees are charged, but students must meet academic standards and be recommended by two professors.

TTU/GTE program goals are:

- to increase the number of competently prepared pre-college students who ultimately will pursue careers in business, engineering, mathematics or science;
- to reinforce the mathematics and computer science preparation of the participants at the pre-college level;
- to increase the retention rate of the participants on colleges or universities; and
- to acquaint participants with professional opportunities in business, engineering, mathematics and the sciences.

"This program gives the student a head start. The classes they take are at the college level. This allows them to see what college is really like."

TTU/GTE-PREP is sponsored by Tech, the math department and GTE Corp. Additional funds have been provided by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board.

Last American hopes with Fernandez

By The Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia — Teenager Mary Joe Fernandez, the lone American left in the Australian Open, has a style reminiscent of the last American to reach the finals — Chris Evert.

Fernandez, who takes the center court today in the women's semifinals against West German Claudia Porwik, grew up near Evert in Florida and saw her as a role model.

Fernandez, now 18 and a pro since she was 14, has grown into a strong, 5-foot-8 player with an increasingly effective net game — better than Evert's at the same age.

Fernandez reached the semifinals at the French Open last year and is No. 11 on the women's rankings, 52 spots ahead of Porwik. In their only previous meeting, Fernandez won in three sets on clay in Berlin last year.

If Fernandez, who upset No. 3 Zina Garrison in the quarters, makes the finals, she probably would face two-time defending champion Steffi Graf.

Graf, who beat Evert in the finals here two years ago, faces Helena Sukova in today's other semifinal. Graf beat Sukova in the final a year ago and has a 14-1 record against her. The only time Sukova beat Graf was in 1983, when Graf was 13 and Sukova 17.

A wild celebration by serene Swede Stefan Edberg — he raised both fists and smiled — punctuated a victory that could help him vault past Boris Becker in the chase for Ivan Lendl's No. 1 spot.

Edberg, ranked No. 3, said he was "pumped" as he reached the men's semifinals Wednesday along with No. 1 Lendl, while No. 2 Becker went by-bye.

That narrowed the gap between Edberg and Becker in the four computer rankings, and spoiled Becker's chances of catching Lendl at least until the French Open.

If Edberg goes on to beat fellow Swede Mats Wilander, Becker's conqueror, in the semifinals and win the Australian for the third time, he could take over the No. 2 spot and move within striking distance of Lendl.

Edberg may not have an easy time beating Wilander, who whipped precision passing shots through swirling winds against the net-charging Becker to beat him 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Lendl will have an equally tough semifinal opponent in Yannick Noah,

TCU deals Raiders now-familiar fate

By JOEL BROWN
The University Daily

FORT WORTH — Texas Tech showed the wear and tear of playing four games in seven days Wednesday night as TCU downed the Red Raiders 62-52 in Daniel-Meyer Coliseum.

A lackluster Tech squad fell behind early in the second half and never recuperated, leaving hopes of the team's first Southwest Conference win put off for another day.

"I wish I had something different to say, but I don't," said Raider coach Gerald Myers, whose team fell to 5-12 overall and 0-7 in SWC play. "In those first five minutes they took control, and after that, we could never get back."

The Horned Frogs built on a 26-25 advantage immediately with a 6-0 run in the first two minutes after the intermission.

But Barron Brown hit two baskets and Will Flemons had one to pull Tech back to within 33-31 at the 15:01 mark.

Then TCU pulled away for good, going on a 14-2 run from 14:41 to 10:11 in the second half.

"We fell behind, started pressing and panicked," Myers said. "I think our guys are playing hard; we just didn't get any good shots."

"I think they're hanging in there pretty good. I think sometimes they are overtrying a bit."

The freshman Brown led the Raiders with 14 points but shot only 6 of 14 from the field. Derex Butts and Flemons tallied 12 points each.

For the game, Tech shooters found the net only 36.8 percent of the time from the floor.

Kelvin Crawford led a Frog field that shot 43.4 percent. Crawford had 15 points, while Craig Sibley and Tony Edmond scored 14 and 11 points respectively.

The Raiders rallied from 10 points down with five minutes left in the first half to pull within a single point at halftime, 26-25.

Brown nailed 2 three-point shots to highlight the brief comeback.

"Any loss is difficult, and when you have a string of them, it definitely takes its toll," Myers said.

Tech fights off Horned Frogs 61-59

By JOEL BROWN
The University Daily

FORT WORTH — Like a bad vacuum cleaner salesman, TCU was hard for Texas Tech to get rid of Wednesday night in Southwest Conference women's basketball action.

But when crunch time came, the Red Raiders closed the door on any Horned Frog upset hopes and escaped Fort Worth's Daniel-Meyer Coliseum with a 61-59 victory.

For Tech, the victory could be a signal that the Raiders are growing up, according to Tech coach Marsha Sharp.

After losing four close contests this season, Tech finally had a squeaker finish in its favor.

"We would like to have kept the big lead, but we were also fortunate that we won a close game," Sharp said. "Maybe that shows that we

Lynch Schilling

Schilling forced a jump ball.

Sophomore post Jennifer Buck was fouled a second later and hit the front end of a one-and-one to make the final score.

The Lady Frogs were given one last chance when Buck's second shot bounced off the rim and officials mistakenly gave TCU a timeout before the team recovered the ball. But Raider guard Tammy Walker stole the in-bounds pass to assure the victory.

Schilling led the Raiders in scoring with 19 points, including 9 from three-point range. Other Tech players in double figures were senior forward Reena Lynch with 12 and Buck with 10.

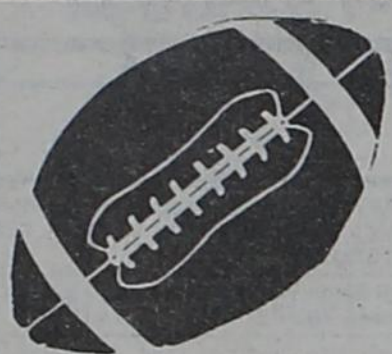

Janice Dzuick led the TCU scoring attack with 22 points.

Tech racked up 10 unanswered points at the onset of the game before TCU recovered with 6 consecutive points of its own.

have matured a little bit."

Down 54-43 with 8:09 left to play in regulation, the Lady Frogs went on a 16-6 point tear over the next 6½ minutes and found themselves within reach of their second major upset in a week's time.

But with TCU trailing 60-59, the Frogs' Jody Elkin and Rachel Hess missed consecutive scoring opportunities and the Raiders took over with :04 remaining when Kelly
