Richards: Williams looks bad when not on scripted commercial

By The Associated Press

FORT WORTH - Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards said Wednesday that Republican rival Clayton Williams doesn't look good when he's not appearing in a scripted TV commercial. Since Williams' fumbled a question about a proposed constitutional amendment during a televised interview Tuesday, Richards has said that shows voters he isn't qualified to be governor.

"I think they (the gaffes) have had an effect, because the person that you see that talks informally in response to questions is a different person than Richards the one you see in the carefully stagtelevision spots," she said.

NEW YORK - World chess champion Garry Kasparov and challenger Anatoly Karpov remained tied Tuesday after they agreed to a draw in the eighth game of their championship match.

The draw came after Kasparov made his 84th move to complete the longest game of the match.

The contestants, each with a victory and five draws, were tied at 3¹/₂ points each.

The game began Monday night and was adjourned after 40 moves when the time limit for a night's play was reached. At that point, experts said Karpov appeared to have a chance of winning.

After losing Game 7, Kasparov pressed to the attack in Game 8 Monday night and put Karpov under severe time pressure. Karpov had only five minutes available for his last 13 moves while Kasparov had 33 minutes.

But Karpov staged a brilliant defense to turn the match around, said Alex Fishbein, an international master.

Grandmaster Michael Wilder called it "unbelievable how bad Kasparov played in the time scramble and how well Karpov played." He said that at times it appeared as if the champion was making completely random moves.

The first player to gain 12½ points wins the championship and $1.7 million of a $3 million prize purse. A 12-12 tie would make Kasparov the winner.

The first 12 games are being played in New York and the remainder will be in Lyons, France.

More emphasis on research hinders academic progress

An admirable challenge for Texas Tech administrators is their much publicized effort to raise Tech to the ranks of a top research institution.

Members of the Tech Board of Regents continue to step in time with President Robert Lawless in his attempt to elevate Tech's research status. A motive for Lawless' endeavor apparently springs from his desire to join the race for research breakthroughs in Texas universities. Hearing repeated praises for research advances at Texas A&M and the University of Texas at Austin have invoked feelings of Tech becoming labeled a second-rate university.

Extensive support and actions for advances and increases in research projects may eclipse emphasis on support for teaching and undergraduate academic progress. After all, lower division courses are the backbone of an educational institution, and they spark potential interest in future research

But even the lucky ones knew this weekly gross has gone from $637 to speeches, and Spam kept rolling off © 1990 New York Times News Service projects.

A failure to recognize and motivate new teaching strategies will result in a reduction of the number of graduates qualified to conduct research. Straddling a research effort to attract graduate students nationwide to Tech may enhance research status. But, the quality of undergraduate students graduating from the university may begin to falter due to a lack of support for teaching quality incentives and innovative teaching programs.

Tech regents have outlined the priorities for the future of the university. For the upcoming academic year, the regents' aims include increasing endowment funds, maintaining admissions standards, building research project funds and improving academic standards. At first glance, improving academic standards seems to encompass improving the state of teaching at Tech.

The focus should be on augmenting student progress with a quality education. This demands support for professors and teachers at the university. Support for scholars involved in educating students should come in the form of placing more emphasis on making teaching an integral part - and a top priority - in improving the academic status of the university. Administrators should more extensively emphasize and support innovative teaching projects as well as acknowledge new strategies in classrooms.

Skin irregularities might be symptoms of psoriasis

By STEPHEN PHILLIPS The University Daily

While most people take the condition of their skin for granted, a chronic skin disorder called psoriasis affects 1 to 3 percent of the population of the United States.

Alan Boyd, of the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center department of dermatology, said that in psoriasis new skin cells proliferate on certain areas of the body and reach the skin's surface quicker than dead skin cells are shed.

The over-production of cells leads to a thickening and scaling of the skin, Boyd said. Psoriasis usually appears as round, thick, reddish patches that have distinct borders. Silvery scales may cover the surface of the patches and are shed in same way as dead skin cells.

Boyd said there are a number of immunologic, microbiologic, genetic, and molecular theories concerning the cause of psoriasis.

"This is a very confusing and confounding disease, and we don't know what causes it," Boyd said. In 25 percent of psoriasis patients, the disease begins before the age of 20, Boyd said. In 10 percent of patients, the first attack occurs before the age of 10.

"This disorder can occur from birth and continue into a person's 90s, and it is a lifelong disease," he said.

Boyd said the knees, elbows and scalp are the classic areas of involvement, but the disease can occur on the trunk and limbs as well. Instances of facial psoriasis are not common except for severe cases. Among the several different types of psoriasis diseases are Guttate Flair, Erythrodermic, Pustular and Psoriasis Vulgaris.

In young people who have suffered from strep throat, Guttate Flair may occur, Boyd said. "This disease looks like someone splattered them with water, and where a drop fell, it turns into psoriasis." The disorder is common after a respiratory infection.

Another type of psoriasis is Erythrodermic. Patients are red from head to toe, scaley and feverish. Erythrdermic psoriasis affects an area greater than 75 percent of the body.

Pustular psoriasis occurs when a patient develops widespread pustules. Pustules are raised pimple-like areas that contain pus. Boyd said pustular psoriasis is severe and can be accompanied by joint aches and fevers.

Patients can die from both Erythrodermic and Pustular psoriasis, Boyd said.

The most common type of psoriasis is called Psoriasis Vulgaris. It is characterized by large scales on the elbows, knees and scalp. Dandruff is not considered psoriasis of the scalp, but it flakes in much the same way.

Treatment for psoriasis depends on the degree of involvement in each patient, Boyd said. Daily coal tar baths have been the treatment standard for many years. Patients are bathed in regular road tar to try to control the disease.

Boyd said that while no real symptoms for psoriasis diseases may exist, any irregularities of the skin should be looked at by a dermatologist.

SWC names 1990 coaches of the year

DALLAS (AP) - University of Arkansas coach John McDonnell has been named Southwest Conference men's Cross Country Coach of the Year.

Baylor University coach Steve Gulley on Tuesday was honored as SWC women's Coach of the Year.

McDonnell's Razorbacks claimed their 17th straight SWC men's championship Monday in College Station with a perfect score of 15.

The award marks the second straight year McDonnell has been named the top coach in the SWC. He has won the award three times in the past four vears.

Court date set for Washington's Sanders

HOUSTON (AP) - Washington Redskins receiver Ricky Sanders will be tried on aggravated assault charges on Dec. 17 in a Houston courtroom. State District Judge Donald Shipley set the date Wednesday in an effort to resolve the case, which stems from a May 1 incident, before football season ends.

Sanders appeared before Shipley Tuesday for pretrial motions and the judge ordered prosecutors and defense attorneys to decide on a date by Wednesday.

Team representatives and Sanders' attorneys negotiated Tuesday to schedule the trial so it would not interfere with the Redskins schedule.

The Redskins will be on the road the week before and week after the date for Saturday games. Washington meets the New England Patriots on Dec. 15 and the Indianapolis Colts on Dec. 22.

Raiders await Aggies, seek to improve 21-2 record

By BELLE MILLER The University Daily

As the season begins to wind down with only three more Southwest Conference matches to play, the 12th-ranked Texas Tech volleyball team takes on league foe Texas A&M at 7 p.m. tonight in the Tech Student Recreation Center. The Red Raiders face the Aggies, who are 12-14 overall and 2-4 in league competition this season. Tech has beaten them once this season in a four-game match on Oct. 10 at College Station.

Coach Mike Jones said the last games are important as the the NCAA post-season tournament. If Tech should lose to one of the unranked teams it plays at the bottom of its schedule, its chances of seeing tourney action would be reduced.

Junior middle blocker Chris Martin said the Raiders feel confident they can win the remaining matches and make it to the NCAA tournament, which was one team goal expressed by the players during the pre-season.

"Right now, we are playing for ourselves because we know we can do it and we want to show that to everybody else," Martin said.

Paso to play in the Texas-El Paso Tournament on Friday and Saturday.

Martin said she is not worried about the team losing its intensity as they will be playing four matches in three days.

"We realize how important the rest of the games are this season and we don't want to let down and have that chance of losing one and knocking us out of the NCAA's," Martin said.

A&M currently holds down the No. 5 spot in the conference and leads the all-time series against Tech 23-15.

The Raiders are on a three-game winning streak after last week's wins over Rice and Baylor and are holding the No. 2 spot in the conference behind undefeated Texas.

The Aggies have played tough at home this season as they are posting a 10-3 record in games played in G. Rollie White. But, A&M has not fared well in away games with a 2-11 record.

Junior outside hitter Sabrina Zenon paces the Raiders in kills and beats Cumings' stats with an average of 3.3 kills per game.

Tech remained at the No. 12 spot in the NCAA National Volleyball Top Twenty Poll. The Raiders also still hold the No. 17 spot in the AV-CA/Tachikara Volleyball Top Twenty Coaches Poll.
