Tech library freezes books, vacuums dry

By The University Daily

The worst thing a person can do to a soaking wet book is let it dry out in the sun, a Texas Tech library administrator says.

In order to save a wet book from the jaws of a trash can, place the book in a deep freezer instead of letting the publication dry up under the radiant sun, said Patricia Marx, head of materials processing at the library.

She said library patrons then should bring the book to the library while it is in a frozen state.

The library uses a vacuum chamber — which is located in Tech's physics department — to drain water out of wet books, Marx said, which is similar to the mechanisms of a vacuum cleaner.

"When you are using a vacuum cleaner, what you are doing is taking all the air out," she said. "We are pulling the air out and keeping it out for a week."

She said 20 to 25 wet books are placed in the chamber at once and that about 200 soaked books are placed in the chamber every year.

She said a chamber that is strong and steady enough to hold the vacuum, a motor to maintain the chamber and a refrigerator to hold water sucked out the wet books are needed to keep the mechanical device intact.

She said the ever-increasing cost of replacing water-damaged books is a reason the vacuum chamber is used.

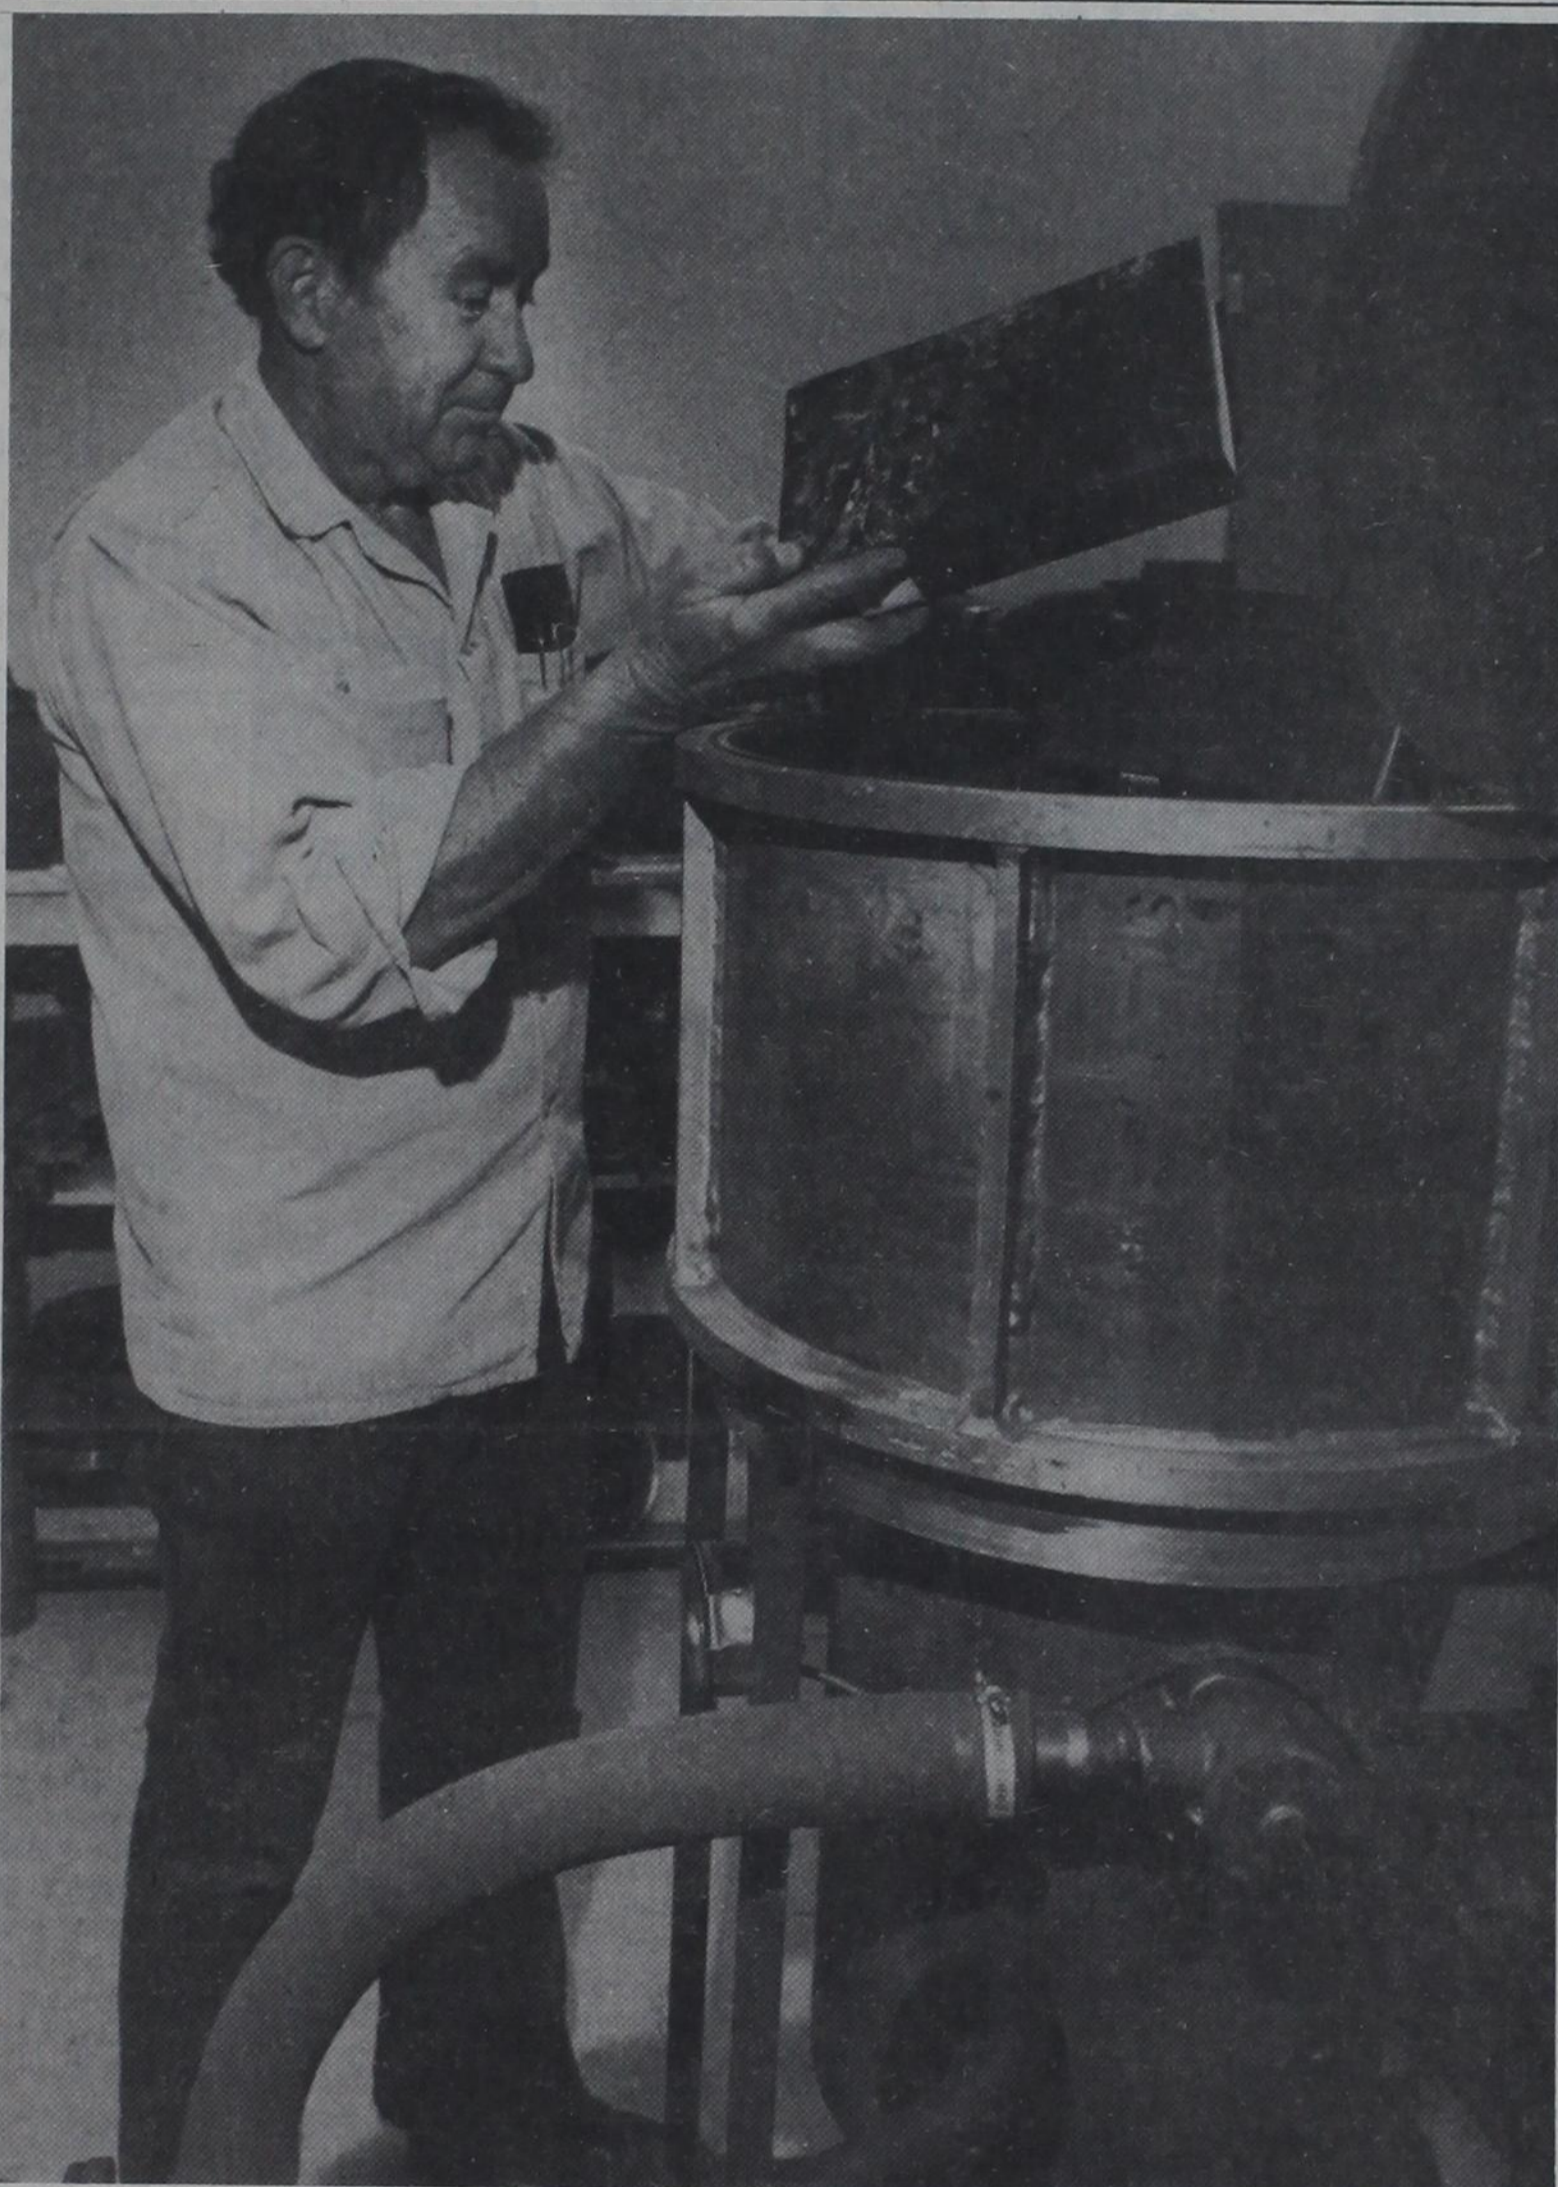

The vacuum chamber was built by James Semarad, former shop superintendent at Tech's physics department, Marx said. The freeze-dry method first was implemented several years ago when Lubbock experienced torrential rains.

Marx said she borrowed the idea of a freeze-dry system from a book written by Peter Waters.

The city of Florence, Italy, was in deep waters when a rainstorm swept through the town many years ago, Marx said.

"A lot of valuable art was damaged," she said, "such as books, manuscripts. Out of that came a lot of international work on restoration of damaged materials."

Waters, who at the time was associated with British museums, went to the U.S. Library of Congress to write a book pertaining to salvaging water-damaged materials, Marx said.

"Several years ago, we had some big rains in September," she said. "That's when the Maxey Lake flooded and we had a lot of water-damaged materials. I knew that we were supposed to put them in the freezer, because that's what the book said."

When the chamber was built, deciding what kind of vacuum was needed became a dilemma, Marx said.

"That book did not give me any specifications or details on what kind of vacuum that was supposed to be used," she said. "I had to call the Library of Congress."

Refugees head West

Over 1,300 East Germans pack embassy

By The Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — More than 1,300 young East Germans jammed the West German Embassy Thursday to seek new lives in the West, and many scoffed at promised reforms in the communist homeland they left behind.

In East Berlin, Communist leader Egon Krenz urged closer economic ties to the West and said a new law permitting freedom of travel to the West would be announced Monday. Several top Communist officials resigned, including the wife of ousted leader Erich Honecker.

At least 8,000 East Germans swarmed into Czechoslovakia after East Germany lifted a month-old travel ban on Wednesday, the official East German news agency ADN said. It is the only country East Germans can visit freely.

Most of those flooding into the embassy in Prague were in their early 20s. At least 200 to 300 children could be seen behind a fence playing peacefully in the embassy grounds.

"We want reforms without borders," said one of the new arrivals, a 24-year-old trucker from Leipzig.

"I don't believe that anything will change there," said another young man who declined to give his name.

"The reforms are only for the outside world."

As darkness shrouded the embassy, East Germans continued to arrive, with at least 20 people gaining entry in just one 15-minute spell.

The refugees simply walked in through the giant wooden doors of the Palais Lobkowitz, the elegant Baroque palace that houses the West German Embassy in Prague's ancient Mala Strana district.

A Czech policeman outside the embassy said he and his colleagues had orders not to interfere with any East Germans seeking entrance because this was a matter for the two Germanys alone.

Several refugees chatted with reporters through the railings of the embassy garden, some sipping beer and listening to music. Others waved from upper-floor windows in the embassy.

Shipments of tents were ordered from West Germany to cope with what embassy sources expected would be a renewed influx over the weekend. West German Red Cross helpers and medical supplies were dispatched from Bonn.

East Germany has agreed to allow East Germans at the embassy and at the West German Embassy in Warsaw to renounce their citizenship and go to West Germany.

Student Senate opposes school liquor ad proposal

By AMY LAWSON
The University Daily

The Texas Tech Student Senate Thursday night unanimously passed a resolution discouraging the passage of pending federal legislation that encourages censorship of college and university student publications.

The resolution, introduced by Sens. Rodney Markham and Ross Crabtree, opposes any legislation that violates First Amendment rights.

The legislation, which was passed by the U.S. Senate and is now in a House of Representatives committee, requires schools to adopt a "policy that would prohibit the advertisement of alcoholic beverages in student newspapers and other publications," the Student Senate's resolution states.

The resolution further states "compliance with this directive would be required in order for schools to retain federal funding."

"Texas Tech University should take the initiative on this issue and see to it that other universities let their legislatures know that we are against censorship of our college newspapers," Markham said. "This piece of legislation (the Student Senate's) is a victory for the students of Texas Tech and hopefully this legislation presented by the United States Senate will fail in the House. We don't need the administration at any university or on any campus telling a college newspaper what to print, period."

According to a press release from the Student Press Law Center, the U.S. Senate amended the original bill Oct. 5 to require schools only to adopt "a policy that encourages such in-

Department officials defend Hightower

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — State agriculture officials Thursday defended billing a crop inspection program thousands of dollars for meals and hotel tabs but revealed that the program provides Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower with a 1988 Chevrolet Blazer.

Jesse Oliver, general counsel of the Texas Department of Agriculture, said the expenditures and vehicle are allowed under the Texas-Federal Inspection Service, a program operated by state and federal officials to provide crop inspections.

He described the flap over the expenses as "a political hatchet job."

Hightower, who was traveling in East Texas to campaign for passage of Proposition 3 in Tuesday's election, said the controversy is a political attack by Gov. Bill Clements and Republican farm officials.

"Clearly, what we have here is yet another attempt by the Republicans — both in Washington and Texas — to create political hay," said Hightower, a Democrat. Clements called for Hightower's impeachment after reports by The Dallas Morning News that Hightower and his top deputy, Mike Moeller, spent about $7,000 on expensive meals and hotel bills and charged it to the Texas-Federal Inspection Service, which is supported by fees paid by growers.

Proposition 9 calls for combining state criminal agencies

By MELISSA SHARP
The University Daily

Proposition 9 on the Nov. 7 ballot calls for a Texas constitutional amendment to combine state criminal justice agencies.

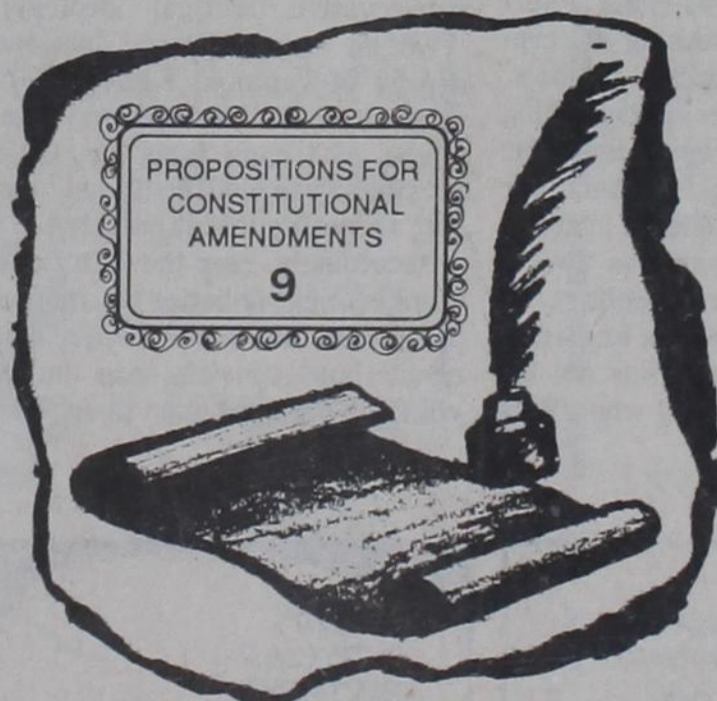

The Texas Adult Probation Commission, the Texas Department of Corrections and the Board of Pardons and Paroles will be combined in January regardless of the proposal's passage.

The combination of the agencies could be unconstitutional without the amendment, said Frank Newton, dean of the Texas Tech School of Law. Pardon, an executive function, and parole, a judicial function, would be administered by the agency.

"Absent a constitutional amendment, it is quite possible that a combined agency will be held to violate the separation of powers doctrine because a single agency would do both pardon and parole oversight and conduct," he said, "which means that what is delegated under the constitution to the governor and what is delegated to the courts would be done by the same agency, and that violates the doctrine of separation of powers."

He said the amendment is designed to eliminate the possibility of a challenge to the agency's constitutionality.

"That judicial challenge could raise substantial issues in individual cases where the combined agency was involved in oversight and administration of pardons and paroles," he said. "It might create a situation where hundreds or thousands of individuals' sentences could be affected, in the sense that a successful challenge to the constitutionality of the combined agency would render any actions by that agency null and void."

Newton compared the combination of agencies without an amendment to his being appointed Texas Tech president by a student.

"A combined agency charged with overseeing parole and pardons which did not have the right under the constitution would similarly be acting in a way which was not legal, and therefore you could create a big mess," he said. "It clearly could create a great deal of confusion and controversy. The public reaction, particularly the people on parole, could be quite harsh."

Advocates for the combination say it will improve the criminal justice system's efficiency and expense.

"I don't think anyone can tell you for sure it will be more efficient or more or less costly," he said. "You can have greater public accountability in the sense that one agency head has to answer for the problem. If efficiency is the motivating force, then all agencies should have been combined instead of only three."

Newton said the combination of the agencies without an amendment is debatable.

"At the very least, I think there would be a request for an attorney general's opinion, and that could well have the effect of preventing the merger of these agencies," he said.

Attorney General Jim Mattox, who recommended the combination to the Legislature, said it is only a small step forward in reforming the criminal justice system.

"We need to have a total overhaul of the criminal justice system, and that will not get the job done," Mattox said. "We have no coordination at all at the top. This will provide some coordination, but we need to go much further."

"If anybody were to design the system that we have today, we'd go and pack them off to a mental health facility because they're dangerous to themselves and to society," he said. "Nobody would design a system like we've got today."

Newton said that with 21 proposals on the ballot, little attention has been paid to Proposition 9. He said the general public does not understand the combination.

High court's decisions dealing with women's rights stir country

Robert Williams
Guest Columnist

On the subject of women's rights, it is perfectly clear this also is a man's issue. With the threat of a decision placing restrictions on a woman's reproductive rights being sent down by the U.S. Supreme Court, the nation has turned to a frenzy. On one side you have the anti-abortionist, a militant and increasingly violent group that seeks to restrict the rights of a woman to a legal abortion. On the correct side you have the pro-choice group, which sees this as an issue of fundamental rights. The lines are clearly drawn. There is no middle ground. As one pro-choice activist said, "the only thing in the middle of the road are yellow lines and dead armadillos." It is obvious why women have rallied around this cause. A woman's reproductive rights are matters of life and death. The right to a safe legal abortion, to effective birth control and to reproductive health education is necessary to women in order for them to make a well-informed decision about childbearing. This information and options offer women choices — choices that have not always been available. Any attempt to hold on to these hard-fought and hard-won gains is commendable, while any opposition to restrict these rights through legislation, regulation or constitutional amendment is understandable and expected. Why this issue? The pro-choice issue is one women can rally around at a crucial time to stem the tide of so-called "new conservatism" (re-read, old tyranny) which seeks to re-establish an old system of restricted rights for women. The issue is a woman's right to self-determine her own fate. Many feel, and justly so, that if you can't control your own body, then how can you self-determine your own life? Regardless of how bright the statistics are for the new woman, there are countless other women who face discrimination based exclusively upon their gender. This discrimination manifests itself in many ways, ranging from hardcore violent crimes committed against women to the subtle, everyday sexist practices that we conduct without questioning. We do it because it is the way it always has been done or it seems to be the natural order of things. Women face discrimination in the economy. According to statistics, women are paid 65 cents for every dollar men are paid. It is predicted that by the year 2000, women and children will make up 100 percent of this nation's poor. The statistics for women of color are even more dismal because they face a double burden of living in a sexist and racist society.

protected. Well, now is the time to make good on that promise. The key to the protection of women is to abide them in their empowerment. Only by empowering women to protect themselves can we self-assured men abide women in a truly meaningful way. The pro-choice issue is not an issue of gender, but an issue of power — power to make your own decisions. Since men have been a great part of the problem, we also can be a great part of the solution. Dedicated, active men must support plans and legislation to provide women with economic stability, health care, support for children and legislation to fight against forces ready to usurp their power at any moment. The ERA — YES! Why — because we all know that the progress we have made for women's rights, and continue to make, can be lost at any time without the strength of a constitutional foundation. Since this is an issue of rights, it transcends the boundaries of mere gender, and everyone has a role to play. Williams is a history and speech communications major.

Letters

Yield to right-of-way

To the editor:
I have been at Tech for 4½ years now, and although I have been tempted to write this letter many times, I have never before felt it worth the time it takes to draft one and type it up — not until now. I have been pushed too far this time, and now the world (well, at least the campus) is going to hear it!
When will you people learn how to drive? It is NOT that difficult if you have an ounce of common sense! On Monday I was driving down Brownfield when some idiot coming from campus just pulled out in front of me as if I were invisible! Luckily, there were no cars in the lane next to me, so I was able to swerve and avoid being killed. Now, there were no cars behind me, so someone please tell me why couldn't the idiot have waited to pull out until I had passed?
I always thought a yield sign meant, "You do not have the right-of-way, so either slow down or stop for those who do." Apparently, it actually means something like "Floor it so you can cut off the person who has the right-of-way, causing them to have to slam on their brakes and wear an inch off their tires." Gee, I guess I need to go back to driver's ed.
What about speed limit signs? Am I mistaken about their meaning also? It seems to me that a sign that reads "55" means "Go 55 miles per hour, weather permitting." Why, then, does everyone in this town insist on driving either 20 miles over or 20 miles under the speed limit?
If the posted speed limit is too high for you, then please drive on residential streets and stay off Brownfield and the Loop. If, on the other hand, it is too low for you, well, there's no place in Lubbock that you need to get to that fast, so SLOW DOWN!!

As a public service (mostly to myself and my car), here are a few "trivial" driving tips:
1. A yellow light does not mean "floor it."
2. Stop means stop — completely (yes, even if there are no other cars around);
3. Turn your head and LOOK before changing lanes;
4. If you are going to turn or pull into a turn lane, signal BEFORE you brake so the driver behind you knows you are going to brake (what a novel idea);
5. Drive the speed limit; and
6. Slow traffic keep right!
By the way, I did not make these up. They were taught to me 6½ years ago in a driver's ed class. Somehow I have managed to retain them, and I don't think it's too much to ask that everyone else do the same.

Chasing red herrings

To the editor:
Alas, leave it to The UD to give us supposedly insightful Texas political analysis from a Michigan native...
When I was resigned to culling the pages of The UD for the "Drink of the Week" and the non-existent sports section, I came across Mr. (Paul) O'Bryan's column seeking to convince me of the all-powerful "Bubba" vote in Texas politics; after taking the time to struggle through two of his columns, I have a few "pointers" for the would-be Texas political pundit.
First, if Mr. O'Bryan was "worth his salt" as an expert in politics, he would realize that the most important upcoming event in Texas is not the "race for governor" and who "Bubba" will or won't vote for, but rather the exit of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and the void left at the only truly critical state governmental office. In Texas, as every student of politics knows (or should know), the governor is for all practical purposes a figurehead; the lieutenant governor controls the legislative and political agendas. Unfortunately, I suppose it's asking too much for The UD or Mr. O'Bryan to engage in some substantive journalism and not simply give us glossy rhetoric about the aesthetic qualities of Ann Richards; instead we get the journalistic equivalent of cotton candy.

It appears that Mr. O'Bryan is guilty of what's known in the law school cant as "chasing a red herring," which signifies the vain pursuit of an irrelevant issue. Unfortunately, neither himself nor The UD reader is edified or enlightened by his "Old Man and the Sea" imitation.
Second, I am somewhat distressed at O'Bryan's characterization of the Texas electorate as comprised mainly of hicks whom he lumps under the tidy heading "Bubba." I suppose one could do the same thing for Michiganans and label it the "Moron" vote; and for some reason I trust eminently more the "Bubba" vote than the mishmash of liberal politics that exists in Michigan and manifests itself in O'Bryan's pseudo-conservative political ideology.
We do know O'Bryan has some degree of common sense; he did, after all, leave Michigan to come to Texas, so I can't fault The UD for practicing some of the liberal "hand-out" mentality that it preaches.
Accordingly, keep the O'Bryan columns coming; or better yet, more columns (like that in last week's paper) about how convicts are unjustly vilified by society upon their release from prison...

But keep in mind, not even children can live forever on cotton candy.

Any pretext for attention

To the editor:
Animal rights? This is merely an irrelevant issue having taken on mammoth proportions. During the '60s, it was fashionable for the idle rich to board the Civil Rights bandwagon. Nowadays, the idle insignificant are inflamed by animal rights; they, craving attention but lacking any reason for it, use this or any issue as pretext to see their name and picture in the paper. Wouldn't it be simpler and more permanent to have a picture taken for the school yearbook? Need I list the uses for a newspaper once read?
Let me say this, I do defend the Sob Sisters their right to flood our world with tears for the endangered crocodile; but let me make a proposal to solve this stillborn issue. Pay these animals for their invaluable contributions to the furtherance and betterment of life on this planet.
Do I hear applause from the Animal Left? Of course, as an irate farmer shoots predators raiding his livestock, so may the Animal People blast my idea right out of the sky. For how could they not embrace such daring? It is for the same reason which, on the one hand, allows some eccentric to provide countless dollars for the sheltering of stray animals, while on the other hand, allows children, bereft of parents and possessions by a fire, to wander the streets homeless. Maybe...

Enemies become friends in Poland's recovery era

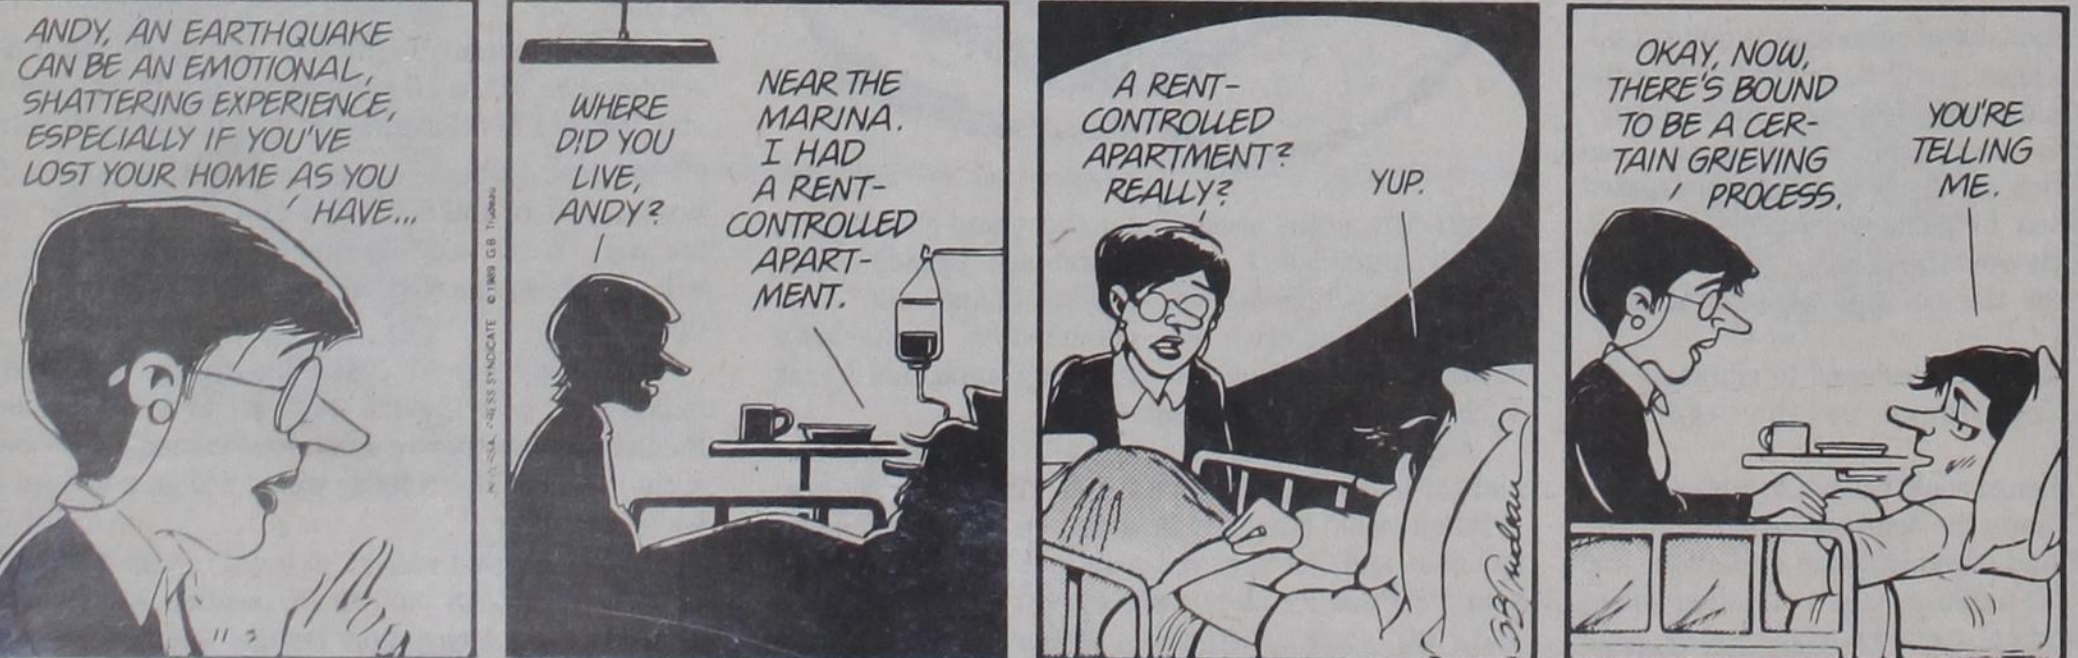

Flora Lewis
Columnist

WARSAW — Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who resigned as Communist Party leader to become President of Poland, speaks enthusiastically now about the coalition entrusted with guiding his country through a profound transformation to freedom. Symbolically, he wears civilian clothes — an elegant brown tweed jacket, creamy shirt and brown knit tie for an interview in his office in the same building that houses the Solidarity Prime Minister, Tadeusz Mazowiecki. Just as symbolically, government offices no longer display anybody's photograph, but the Polish eagle.
It is the future of the nation and what he calls "a new era in history" that Jaruzelski emphasizes. He draws an analogy with the "new thinking" of the Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, on foreign policy, "abandoning the doctrine of class war and the conflict between social systems to put first the survival of mankind, the avoidance of war."
"We must have similar thinking on domestic affairs," he said. "The stability is more important than the power of the party. There is a government and parliamentary majority going one way" (Solidarity). But he pointed out that "the civil service, the army, the security apparatus are guided by the ideology of the minority" (Communist). The "inevitable collisions must be subordinate to superior interests. The point is for our coalition not to break up."
The concerns he voices are little different from those of Solidarity's leaders, the difficulty of sustaining the public's patience for hard times ahead while the economy is turned around into a largely free market system. He talks about sacrifices: "In order to get better, things must get worse. I'm afraid it will be a year" before reforms produce tangible results in everyday life.

"We need public support. No political force can do it alone, so we need a broad coalition to maintain stability."
In addition to the economic shoals to navigate, he sees political dangers "from extremists on the right and the left. They are not a serious threat today, but if the society is too dissatisfied, they could be. This is the way Hitler came to power. We need realism and democracy to keep the extremists from gaining."
Like Prime Minister Mazowiecki, he stresses the need for "evolutionary" change. "Euphoria is dangerous," he said.
He sees Poland now "between two worlds. Historically, culturally, Poland is strongly linked to the West. Our security places us in the East. Poland is a kind of testing ground. If there is anarchy, it would harm the reform forces in other countries and the whole East-West relation."
West Germany's chancellor, Helmut Kohl, is due to visit Warsaw soon. While the Poles want the discuss economic relief, the future of the two Germanys and its fatefulness for Poland also will be on everybody's mind. Jaruzelski likes to dwell on the importance of Poland's success with reforms as an example that will show the way to peaceful change.
"Bread without democracy is dry and bitter," he said, "but democracy without bread is sterile, futile."
He still defends imposing martial law and banning Solidarity in 1981 as a necessity. Neither side in Poland was "ripe" then for a real agreement, he said, "but all of us are different today." He does seem to be. And he smiles. He gets on with the old enemies who are his new partners.

ACLU believes drug war may hurt rights

By CORTCHIE WELCH
The University Daily

The United States' passion directed at addressing the nation's drug crisis frequently involves violations of the Fourth Amendment and legitimate expectations of privacy, said a former president of a local chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

"Many individuals are very anxious to use drug testing to discover forbidden drug use," said Rodric Schoen, an associate dean of the Texas Tech School of Law and past president of the Texas Civil Liberties Union in Dallas.

"The ACLU is very much concerned about the erosion of important individual liberties and our anxieties and frustrations in trying to address a very serious problem with drug abuse in the United States," said Schoen, who was president of the local chapter from 1985 to 1988 and who has been affiliated with the New York-based union for 22 years.

Preservation of a woman's right to choose an abortion and standard separation of church and state on whether to incorporate religious activities into secular governmental functions are some of many issues the ACLU is conferring on at state and national levels, Schoen said.

He said the ACLU's position on abortion is well-known and that the organization will continue to believe a woman does have a constitutional-protective right of privacy and of personal autonomy and not for the government to make decisions with respect to her reproductive functions.

He said the best guarantee for religious freedom for all Americans is to maintain government and religious entities as separate bodies.

"I believe continuing the separation of church and state is wise," he said. "It is the right of each individual to believe as he or she will as respect to religious matters. We have many different religious beliefs as well as some people who have no religious beliefs. Those matters should be left to individuals, and they should neither be supported nor condemned by the state."

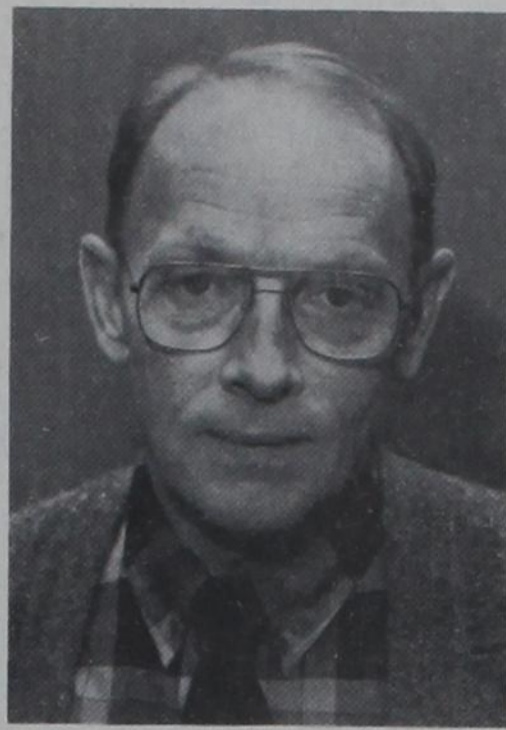

He said the conflict resulting after the U.S. Supreme Court's 5-4 decision against a resolution to make burning the U.S. flag a crime has been temporarily resolved.

The union's chapter in Dallas brought the case to the Supreme Court, he said.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals also invalidated the move to establish a statute prohibiting desecration of the flag, Schoen said.

Although the Supreme Court's judgment created hysteria among the American people, Schoen said the decision was in harmony with rights guaranteed in the Constitution.

"The court's decision was consistent with prior First Amendment cases," Schoen said. "The court's decision also recognized that there is a large measure of symbolic expression which is entitled to protection and the government does not have a legitimate interest under the First Amendment in trying to enforce orthodox beliefs with respect to our national symbol."

Schoen, who spent 20 years in the Naval Reserve, said he is offended by people who desecrate the American flag but that his personal beliefs are not relevant to the First Amendment issue.

Schoen said he opposes a constitutional amendment supported by President George Bush to ban flag desecration because there never has been a constitutional revision that intended to take away individual rights.

"Never in our history has a constitutional amendment been ratified, or even proposed, to my knowledge," he said, "in which the amendment would in some way subtract from or diminish individual rights of expression recognized by the Supreme Court under the First Amendment."

One of the great strengths of the written constitution in the United States, Schoen said, is that the First Amendment requires the majority to tolerate viewpoints and expressions that are violently disagreeable.

He said the ACLU always is concerned with the government attempting to censor individuals who are exercising their First Amendment rights.

Schoen said many people believe the ACLU is a liberal and partisan organization. He said, however, that the group is a nonpartisan organization that does not necessarily endorse or approve reactionary and loathsome groups the association has represented.

"The major concern of the ACLU," he said, "is the Bill of Rights. Regardless of our clients' viewpoints or political beliefs, regardless of what side of the political spectrum they might be on, the ACLU takes those cases to protect the principles of the Bill of Rights."

The ACLU recently has represented a conservative political action committee, he said, concerning the group's First Amendment rights to collect money, expand and defeat liberal candidates for public office.

"The reason the ACLU takes those kinds of cases is that the principle can be applied to anyone to the extent that if conservatives are protected, then liberals are protected," Schoen said.

Soviets' math skills excellent, prof says

By FRANCISCO RODRIGUEZ
The University Daily

A Texas Tech mathematics professor recently attended a conference on "Optimization Methods and their Applications" in the Soviet Union.

Clyde Martin, an Ex-Students Association Distinguished Professor of Mathematics, was one of four Americans to participate in the conference sponsored by the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Martin remained in the Soviet Union from Sept. 6 to Sept. 29.

"The conference took place in Siberia, on Lake Baykai," Martin said. "It's a conference that has been going on for about 20 years. It's biennial or triennial depending on the organizers."

Martin said the conference admitted foreigners for the first time two years ago. He said this year is the first time U.S. citizens were allowed.

"There were four U.S. citizens and four other permanent residents of the United States," Martin said. "The total attendance was about 120, 30 of them being non-Soviets, although most of the non-Soviets were from Eastern Bloc countries."

Martin said the theme of the conference was optimization and applications. He said the theme relates to mathematics in engineering, with the idea of optimizing design using mathematical or computer science techniques.

"It's an old theme in the Soviet Union, and they do a lot of it; they always have," Martin said. "It's done in the United States as well, but not to the extent that the Soviets do."

Martin said although Soviets don't have access to computers the same way Americans do, their theoretical mathematics are excellent.

"Their manual mathematical capabilities are very good, and always have been," Martin said.

"The mathematics school in the Soviet Union goes back to the 1700s. It's comparable to what we call the 'French school' of mathematics. They're not better than we are; they're just different. There's some things that they do exceedingly well, and there's other things we do exceedingly well. And there's some things we're both good at."

Martin said the Soviets would like to have more interaction with the United States. He said he is making arrangements to bring a Soviet mathematician next October.

"We've talked about it informally, and the official invitation has gone to him," Martin said. "Some time in the next six months I should get a formal acceptance. We would like to do this on a more permanent basis."

Martin said a formal method of exchange in systems theory is being discussed within the university. He said the one mathematician he has invited is sponsored by non-university funds.

"The academy allowed me to spend four days in Moscow and four days in Kiev," Martin said. "We visited and lectured at a variety of institutes comparable to those in the United States. We talked to the leading scientists at the Control Theory Institute and the Moscow Institute of Aviation and had very good exchanges."

Martin said he also visited the Institute of Cybernetics at Kiev. He said both Kiev and Moscow are similar to cities in the United States.

"Kiev especially is extremely beautiful," Martin said. "It has many parks, and the people are friendly. Moscow is more like New York City; 9.5 million people live there permanently, and on a normal day there'll be 12 million people in the city. It's like downtown Dallas; people will not necessarily smile at you, although people in smaller cities were extremely friendly."

Prof discusses human errors, contributing factors

Human error is not always a question of whether the human made the error, but rather which human is at fault, says an industrial engineering professor.

Tom Leamon, a professor and chairman of the industrial engineering department, lectured on "To Err Is Human" Thursday in the University Center.

"Frequently things get assigned as human error," he said. The question is "which human?" he said. "That is, which one involved in the process made the error?"

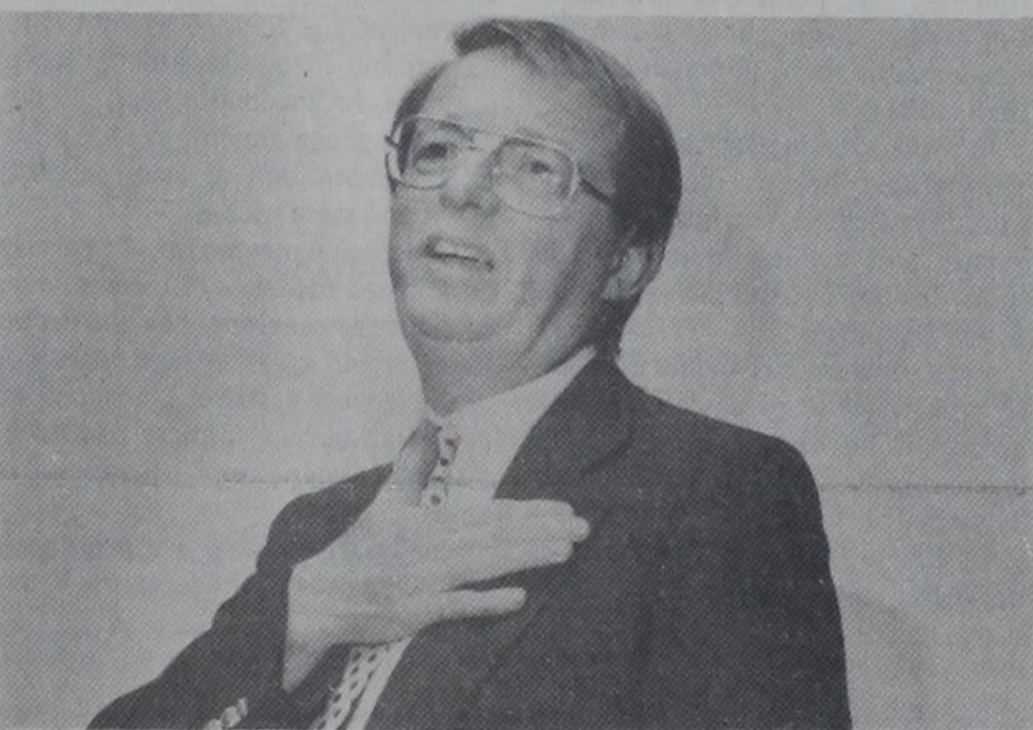

Leamon said although the error often is blamed on the operator, such as the pilot in an airplane crash, the error actually may be an error in the design.

"The hypothesis is, frequently, it's not the operator's fault, ... it's an error made by the designer," he said. "It isn't an error of which human being (is at fault), it is an error of why it hasn't been corrected before it causes a human being the risk."

Leamon said error can involve absolute versus relative judgment. He said when using absolute judgment, an operator of machinery may not know when he or she is wrong.

"When you make an error in judgment, absolute judgment, you don't know you're wrong," he said.

Leamon said many factors may contribute to errors committed by humans, including chains of events, physical limitations, instructions humans receive and wrong solutions.

stitution's newspapers and other publications to reject advertisements promoting irresponsible or illegal consumption of alcoholic beverages."

In other business, the senate also passed legislation recommending the extension of the operating hours of the Texas Tech "Campus Shuttle."

The resolution, introduced by Sens. Grady Whitaker, Tina Winslow, Elizabeth Deadwyler, Bret Hobbs, Jamey Laney and Elena Perales, proposed to extend the hours of the shuttle from 3 a.m. until daylight hours.

"They like that we not use 'rape van,' and even though it's going to be referred to as that by students, that's not really its name," Laney said.

The senate also passed legislation supporting Proposition 21 on the Texas Special Election Ballot.

The resolution, introduced by Sen. Nick Federspiel, stated the proposed constitutional amendment would authorize the Texas Legislature to enact laws allowing the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board to sell $75 million in college savings bonds. The proceeds would be credited to the Texas Opportunity Plan Fund, which makes loans to students attending institutions of higher education in Texas.

"If I had to give one piece of advice to the student body, it would be to go and vote for Proposition 21; it's the most important proposition on the ballot," Federspiel said.

The senate also passed legislation recommending that crosswalks between Flint Avenue and Boston Avenue on 18th Street be painted.

The resolution, introduced by Sens. Amy Talley, Stacy White, Doug Forte, Russ Laird, Thomas Benninger and Robert Lowery, stated that the crosswalks would alert oncoming vehicles of the high volume of pedestrian traffic in the area.

The crosswalks would be painted to connect the Hulen and Clement residence halls to the art building and the Wall and Gates residence halls to the psychology building.

Texas politicians react to income tax proposal

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's call for a state income tax brought quick, negative and bipartisan responses from several other Texas politicians Thursday.

"The wolf ... is at the door," said Republican Kent Hance of Lubbock, who favors a constitutional ban on income taxes.

"I said from the beginning that this campaign would come down to a choice between an income tax and a lottery," said Democrat Jim Mattox, who is promoting a lottery to raise money for schools.

Republican Gov. Bill Clements also rejected Hobby's idea. "The governor respectfully disagrees with the lieutenant governor," said press secretary Rossanna Salazar.

Texas has neither a personal nor corporate income tax, and the idea has been so unpopular around the Legislature that many lawmakers refer to it only as "the I-word."

Hobby, a Democrat, isn't seeking re-election for the first time since 1973.

He proposed the income tax as a way to raise additional money for public schools — while lowering other taxes — at a time when the Legislature faces a May 1 state Supreme Court deadline for overhauling the school finance system.

But Clements' press secretary said more money isn't the only solution to the school dilemma.

Hance, whose proposal for a constitutional income tax ban is a cornerstone of his campaign for the GOP nomination, said Hobby's call proves him right about the threat of such a tax.

"As I've said all along, the liberals in the Legislature want to impose an income tax on the people of this state. My opponents have called banning an income tax ludicrous, moot and phony. Today, they must be eating their words," Hance said.

"Make no mistake. When the leading Democrat in the Legislature and the leader of the Texas Senate calls for an income tax there is a clear and present danger. The wolf — a state income tax — is at the door," Hance said.

Republican candidate Jack Rains said he wasn't surprised by Hobby's call.

"We know that liberal Democrats favor an income tax," he said.

Nuclear panel to review safety of Amarillo plant

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A team of nuclear reactor experts appointed by the Energy Department will meet in Amarillo this month for a hearing and closed session on issues facing Pantex, the nation's only final assembly site for nuclear weapons.

The 13-member Advisory Committee on Nuclear Facility Safety will meet Nov. 13-14 to review safety and environmental issues at Pantex in the panel's first hearing on the plant, said Wallace R. Kornack, the panel's executive director.

"This is the first time we've visited Pantex and that's one reason we don't have any considered opinions or views yet — that's something that will develop when we get out there," Kornack said Thursday.

Witnesses expected to testify include representatives of the local office of the Department of Energy and of the contracting firm, Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Company Inc., which operates the plant.

The public will be allowed to comment during a two-hour period during the night of Nov. 13. The panel also is expected to tour the plant.

"Our goal is to air out the truth, ferret out the facts of any issue that is before us," Kornack said. "The group is well qualified to determine what is fact from fancy. I think there is no reason why a contractor would try to hide the facts from the committee. The committee would rapidly see through fabrications of one sort or another."

The Energy Department in January estimated that it would cost $1.7 billion over the next two decades to preserve and modernize the plant, located 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The World War II-era plant sits atop the Ogallala aquifer, practically the only source of usable water for the state's largest irrigated farming region, the Texas High Plains.

Plant officials have said there is gas and industrial solvent contamination of the ground beneath the plant, but that there is no immediate danger of the contaminants seeping into the region's drinking water supplies.

The so-called "tiger team" of federal inspectors from the Energy Department and Occupational Safety and Health Administration just spent about two weeks at Pantex assessing the plant's compliance with environmental and safety laws.

The team's findings and the report of the advisory committee will be presented to Energy Secretary James A. Watkins.

Hobby for enactment of state income tax

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby called for a state income tax, saying Thursday the politically unpopular levy would resolve school finance problems and be more fair than current Texas taxes.

"It would, I suggest to you, be a considerable improvement for the education system, the business community and the tax system of this state," Hobby told the Texas Association of Taxpayers.

A state income tax should be coupled with relief from other taxes that unfairly burden the poor and discourage business investment, Hobby said.

"If I'm the father of the Texas income tax, can I also be the guy who abolished the franchise tax, lowered property taxes and lowered the sales tax?" he asked after his speech to the business-based association.

An income tax would address a Texas Supreme Court ruling that the current school finance system, with its funding inequities among school districts, is unconstitutional, Hobby said. The school funding system relies on a combination of local property taxes and state money.

"A personal income tax of 4 percent on a broad measure of income, even with generous exemptions and deductions, would raise enough money to replace every dollar of school property taxes, and add almost another $1 billion per year to fund education," he said.

Hobby, a Democrat who is not seeking election after heading the Texas

Senate since 1973, acknowledged that the proposed levy is a political hot potato in Texas, which has neither a personal nor corporate income tax.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Kent Hance launched his campaign for the 1990 GOP nomination by pledging to prohibit an income tax. Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Jim Mattox is pushing a lottery for school funding, calling it the only alternative to an income tax.

"Most statewide candidates will be forced to oppose it," Hobby said. "But if the idea of an income tax is not put fairly and accurately into the debate of this state's future, we are letting our children and grandchildren down."

The property tax hits poor taxpayers harder than the wealthy, and it has been an unreliable funding source as property values have fallen this decade, Hobby said.

The sales tax also is regressive, affects investment and weighs too heavily on business, he said, while the franchise tax imposes a levy on investments and is unfair.

The income tax is more just, he said, but "has been the subject of the worse smear campaign since Joe McCarthy."

Texas, the most populous state that doesn't levy its own personal income tax, is tied for the third highest state sales tax in the nation, at 6 cents per dollar.

Although Hobby said he would like to see a state income tax considered right away, he predicted it will not be examined again until lawmakers meet in regular session in 1991.

Local cover band began as joke

By FRANK PLEMONS
The University Daily

What sets Blank Expression part from other local cover bands is the extraordinary circumstances that brought its members together.

According to bassist Philip Dixon, one of his Clement Hall neighbors was impressed with his music equipment.

"Derrit and I were recording some originals and cover songs in my mini-studio when this guy on my hall asked me if I had a band," Dixon said. "We went along with him and said I did."

This joke turned serious when Dixon's neighbor, who was a member of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, invited him to have his band open last year's TKE Spring Jam.

Dixon threw together vocalist Riley Shaw, guitarist Derrit DeRouen and drummer Wayne Barringer and accepted the invitation to open the jam.

The members of Blank Expression have been together since the jam and now are trying to get gigs at Lubbock venues. So far, the group has found that most venues are booked for the rest of the semester.

Blank Expression is trying to get a weekend spot at Main Street Saloon, according to Barringer.

"We're going to get to play the Main Street open jam this coming Wednesday," Barringer said. "After that, the manager says she will let us know."

Besides playing private parties, Blank Expression has played the Residence Halls Association Spring Fair.

Although the band members have school responsibilities, they say they try to practice at least once a week.

The band also is working on a demo tape of its set, which now is 25 songs long. "This tape will help us get outside of Lubbock," Dixon said.

Poker faces

Being stared at by the blank expression on the wall, Blank Expression covers songs by '70s super groups such as Led Zeppelin and the Rolling Stones along with more recent hits by ZZ Top and the Cult. The band is composed of drummer Wayne Barringer, left, bassist Philip Dixon, vocalist Riley Shaw and guitarist Derrit DeRouen.

1970s super groups such as Led Zeppelin and the Rolling Stones. The band also is prone to covering more recent material by ZZ Top and the Cult.

Although they agree to play the same music, the band members certainly are at odds with their personal preferences. "For example, I think Pete Townshend is the greatest guitarist ever, while Derrit thinks he sucks," said Shaw.

Hahn hosts rock 'n' roll mud wrestling special

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Let history record that on Nov. 10, those willing to pay $9.50 for some, er, culture can see "Thunder and Mud," a pay TV special that features heavy metal rock music, female mud wrestling and ... Jessica Hahn.

There may be those who say, "You're kidding."

To them, Hahn would say that there will be such a show, that it runs 90 minutes, that she is the hostess and that "it's not 'Masterpiece Theater.' It's a little crazy."

"I'm just there for the PR, if you ask me," said the former church secretary whose sexual encounter with television evangelist Jim Bakker led to his loss of the PTL empire in 1987.

Bakker has been sentenced to 45 years in prison and fined $500,000 for defrauding his followers for his own enrichment. Hahn now lives in West Hollywood, Calif., where she gave several interviews about him last week.

She told reporters she wasn't satisfied with the sentence given Bakker. She is pretty much talked out about him, she now says. But she's fully aware that "it's always going to be identified with me because, in one sentence here and there (in interviews), I'm always asked about it."

A cheerful-sounding woman despite occasional verbal rocks cast at her by those who are without sin, Hahn readily acknowledges that her "Thunder and Mud" stint and earlier entertainment ventures are due to the publicity she got when the Bakker matter surfaced.

"Of course. One thing led to another," she says. She cites her Playboy magazine appearance, talk show visits and frequent on-air joking with Howard Stern, the much-publicized bad boy of New York radio.

"He's a crazy man, but I love him," she said.

Last year, she was featured in a "Wild Thing" video that aired on MTV. The video spoofed rock videos and starred Sam Kinison, the comic who screams.

New film in style of 'Top Gun' features Army helicopters

FORT HOOD (AP) — A leather-faced colonel strides out of a Fort Hood airfield hangar and tells a group of the Army's best Apache helicopter pilots to get ready for combat.

In 72 hours they will support a Drug Enforcement Administration effort to arrest drug cartel leaders in South America.

"Our job is to make damn sure they get that chance," the colonel says.

It could happen. But this time it's Hollywood, not Holocaust.

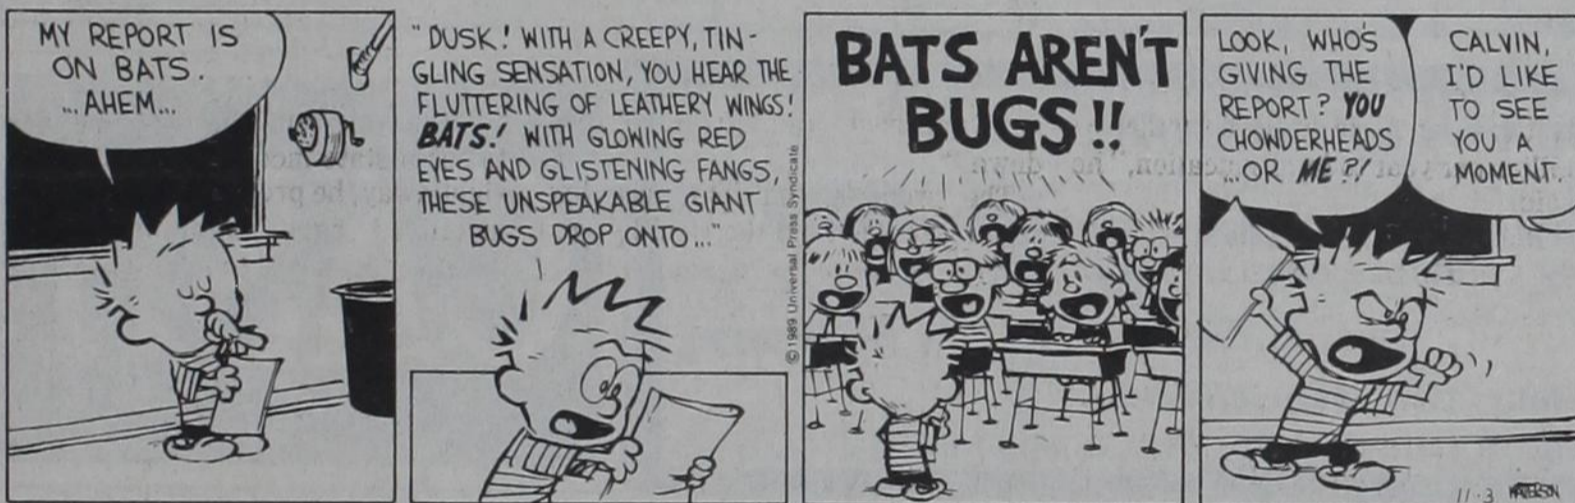

Fort Hood is hosting filmmakers and actors Tommy Lee Jones, Nicolas Cage and Sean Young this week in a movie collaboration to create "Wings of the Apache."

Army officials hope the movie, which has been in the works for two years at various air bases, will do for the AH-64 Apache attack helicopter what Tom Cruise and "Top Gun" did for the Navy's F-14 Tomcat warplanes — show superiority of American military weapons.

The story will tell of a U.S. military task force attack on the drug cartel's "unnamed South American country."

Fort Hood will act mostly as an Apache-heavy backdrop to character acting scenes, with most of the combat and destruction taking place at Arizona sites. The movie will cost $16.9 million and will hit theaters next summer, said producer William Badalato, who also produced "Top Gun."

The score of this game has the potential to be scary. A&M, remember, beat Houston by four points, and Houston beat SMU by 74.

Pony quarterback Mike Romo already is sixth in SMU history with 1,882 passing yards in this, his freshman season.

The Aggies will win because SMU is looking forward to next week's game with Notre Dame.

HOUSTON (5-2, 2-2)
at TCU (4-4, 2-3)

The Cougars still are reeling from last week's 45-39 loss in Arkansas. Rumor has it Jack Pardee's gang will use an extra tube of slippery stuff on their jerseys since it didn't work well enough against the Hogs.

Pardee claimed it was just sweat, but Arkansas felt differently.

The Cougars are spending $126 a week sending fliers around the nation promoting Andre Ware for the Heisman.

The Frogs have an on-again, off-again team, especially at home. Jim Wacker's squad surprised everyone with a 27-9 whipping of Air Force two weeks ago. But last week TCU lost by the same score at Baylor.

ARKANSAS (6-1, 3-1)
at RICE (1-6-1, 1-4)

Arkansas had its trouble against the Owls in Houston last year with a 21-14 squeaker. As recently as 1980, Rice even managed to beat the Razorbacks when Lou Holtz was in the hills.

The Hogs have one of the best backfields in all of college football with Grovey and running backs James Rouse and Barry Foster. They average 335 yards a game on the ground.

This game will be a reunion of Rice coach Fred Goldsmith and Hog master Ken Hatfield. Goldsmith coached numerous bowl teams at Air Force and Arkansas under Hatfield for nine seasons. The big question is whether Goldsmith remembers enough about his former team to cover the 21 points the Razorbacks are favored by.

Tech spikers craving postseason play

By CAMERON MAUN
The University Daily

Volleyball coach Mike Jones has plenty of incentive not to overlook Texas Tech's opponent today, Baylor. The Red Raiders (15-10, 5-2) host the Bears (10-16, 0-6) at 7 p.m. in the Student Recreation Center in the final home match of the year for Tech. Baylor did not prove to be a formidable foe for the Raiders in their earlier meeting this year. Tech won in three games in Waco, 15-2, 15-2, 15-2. But Jones said Baylor is not to be taken lightly and that the Bears can play well. Jones said that if Tech can win its last four games, there is "an outside shot" the Raiders will be invited to the NCAA postseason tournament. The top 32 teams in the nation are invited. The Raiders have been ranked as high as 29th this season, but after their loss to Texas on Oct. 25, Jones said, "we're on the bubble right now." "Beating Rice (on Wednesday) helps, but we have to win our next four to have a shot," Jones said. "That would put us at 8-2 in conference and 19-10 for the year. "Twenty seems to be the magic number to get invited, and losses in double figures doesn't look good, but I think we've got a chance." If the NCAA doesn't come calling, the Women's Invitational Volleyball Tournament in Birmingham, Ala., most likely would be interested in Tech as one of its 16 teams, Jones said. Tech defeated Rice in Houston in five games to put itself in the driver's seat for second place in the conference. Jones said he is not sure why his team has been so successful in five-game matches this year (6-0) but that it is a sign that his team plays hard at all times. "I have no clue why we do so well," he said. "We're supposed to be too young to be winning all these close matches. It just shows that this team plays hard enough and long enough in all matches to always have a chance." Tech fell behind Wednesday by losing the first two games but rallied to win the last three, holding off a late Owl scare in game five. Going into today's match, Tech will be paced by the attacking of outside hitters Sabrina Zenon and Vicki Baldwin. Zenon has been on a tear for the second half of the season and had 17 kills with only two hitting errors against Rice.

Buffaloes play for Big 8 lead

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska's players and coaches have had plenty of good things to say about second-ranked Colorado this week. Intimidating, overwhelming and unbeatable are not among them. Colorado, led by quarterback Darian Hagan, has rolled up an 8-0 record, same as No. 3 Nebraska. The Buffs are 4-0 in the Big Eight, same as Nebraska. And Colorado has done it against a list of opponents much more talented than those of the Cornhuskers. Cornhusker offensive tackle Doug Glaser agreed Colorado is a quality club but said he has taken exception to the Buffalo chant this week that "things have changed." Colorado defeated Oklahoma last week 20-3 to snap a streak of 13 straight Sooner victories. Colorado defeated Nebraska 20-10 in 1986 in Boulder. The Huskers also were third-ranked and unbeaten that year.

Glaser said it still is up to Colorado to push the Big Eight Conference champions from the top of the hill. "Nebraska has been the force in the Big Eight, not Colorado as far as I'm concerned," Glaser said.

Surging Raider golfers open SWC play Sunday

Fresh off their first victory of the fall season, the Texas Tech men's golf team travels to Austin to compete in the 20th Annual Harvey Penick Golf Tournament Sunday and Monday. The Raiders topped 16 other squads two weeks ago at the West Texas Intercollegiate Tournament and hope to continue their winning ways in Austin. The Penick tournament is the first of three events that count toward rankings in the Southwest Conference standings. Last year at the Penick event, the squad turned in its worst performance of the fall season, finishing seventh among 13 teams, and had to settle for fifth among SWC competition. Tech coach Tommy Wilson said he hopes for a better showing from his squad in Austin this season.

Women try luck at tough Cardinal Invitational

Senior triple letterwinner Amy McDougall will lead the Texas Tech women's golf team in traveling to Village Mills to take part in the 10th Annual Lady Cardinal Golf Invitational this weekend near Beaumont. The 54-hole tournament that marks the conclusion of the Red Raiders' fall schedule will feature a college-amateur format on Saturday to raise funds for charity. A 36-hole double-round kicks the Invitational off Sunday on the 5,980-yard, par-73 Wildwood Country Club course. The final 18 holes will be played as the tournament resumes on Monday. Tech finished last year's Invitational in seventh place with a team total of 946, 42 strokes off the pace of tournament winner TCU.
