Lubbock area cotton threatened by freeze

By The Associated Press

The so-called West Texas crop, which typically yields half of the state's cotton production and a fifth of the nation's, is in dire risk of an early Concentrated in a 100-mile radius of Lubbock, the crop still is blooming and setting bolls in a region where fall freezes always are a danger. This year the freeze risk is greater because most of it was planted two weeks after the optimal time.

With growth further slowed by almost a week of below-normal temperatures in August, the bolls are far from maturity. Cold weather would result in less and weaker fiber.

"The later our freeze, the more cotton we make," said John Johnson of Lubbock, spokesman for the Plains Cotton Cooperative Marketing Association.

Last year it didn't freeze until Nov. 16, one factor in making a huge crop. In 1987 the first-freeze date was Nov.

10, and it was also a bumper crop. The average first-freeze date is Oct.

31, according to the National Weather Service in Lubbock.

There have been years when cold winds from the slopes of the Rocky Mountains whistled across the open plains in September or early October.

"If that happens, 80 cents here we come," said Terry Miller, vice president of the New York Cotton

Exchange. The futures price on the exchange

The overall poor Texas crop comes at a time when crops in the Mississippi Delta are below par, exports are strong, mill use in the United States is up, and world cotton production is down. The U.S. crop is forecast at 11.1 million bales compared with 15.1 million in 1988.

Cotton currently is extremely popular with consumers, with cotton's share of total fiber processed by spinning at a 17-year high this summer, according to Cotton Incorporated. But not all cotton crops in Texas

Grant enables Tech professor to press on with dyslexic research

By FRANCISCO RODRIGUEZ The University Daily

Most people tackle written words or music without a second thought, but for a dyslexic child, printed words or music can create confusion and bewilderment.

Don Tanner, a Texas Tech associate music professor, has received a $28,000 grant from the Initial Teaching Alphabet Foundation (ITAF) to continue studies with children identified with reading problems.

Tanner implemented the study last year at Frenship North Ridge Elementary School after ITAF gave him a $32,000 grant to initiate the research. Tanner worked primarily with children with below-grade-level reading skills.

"I've worked with Chapter I program children and special education children," Tanner said. "I'm particularly interested in working with dyslexic children."

Dyslexia is a condition that impairs the reading skills of an individual. When a dyslexic looks at a printed page, he or she sees symbols between blank spaces but cannot piece them together and follow the sequence.

Tanner said extra markings on a page can confuse dyslexics. He said staffs and stems on a sheet of music also can frustrate the untrained dyslexic.

Dyslexics sometimes have problems following a beat or sequence, he said.

Tanner said his study is geared at finding ways to teach music reading skills to dyslexic students. "Students with dyslexia often are very talented in the arts," he said. "They show a high aptitude for art and music, but because of their reading disability they can't look at a piece of music and make sense out of it." Tanner said reading music requires the ability to sequence things in order and keep a steady beat. "Many dyslexics are rhythmically uncoordinated." he said. "That gives them many problems. They have difficulty telling left from right, clapping their hands or following movements."

Tanner's teaching approach uses phonics — a system that breaks words down in parts and sounds each one out. He said that whenever a dyslexic encounters a new word, the person can break down the word and understand it.

"ITA uses a system where every sound has its own symbol," Tanner said. "Alphabet letters are irregular. The symbol for 'e' stands for both the short- and longsounding vowel sounds. ITA is more systematic and consistent, thus easing the learning process by getting rid of ambiguity."

The same principle, he said, applies to music.

"Music notation is just as consistent as ITA," Tanner said. "Every symbol has its own meaning. A quarter note will always be identified by the same symbol. I found that we were able to transfer the same learning sequence that ITA uses for regular reading to reading musical notation."

Tanner also said that individuals read with a certain extent of rhythm. He said teaching dyslexics to follow a beat eases the learning process.

"There are three modes of learning: visual, auditory and kinesthetic," he said. "A normal child can remember and learn something he sees or hears. In order to learn something, children with learning disabilities need to hear, see and actually do whatever they're trying to learn.'

Tanner said most special education programs are built on multi-sensory learning.

'Music is good for that. It's a natural," he said. "Children can look at music on paper, hear it and play it. All three modes of learning can be implemented."

Tanner said the program enjoys plenty of success. He said the children in the program improved their reading and musical abilities from 100 to 300 percent over dyslexic children who were not in the program.

Tanner said he will continue the program at Frenship North Ridge and will implement a new program at Frenship Crestview Elementary. He said children who were in the program last year will continue to be part of "This year we intend to refine some of the things we did last year," he said. "Our goal is to develop a reading-learning sequence utilizing multi-sensory techniques. We will balance reading and music as well as the rest of the curriculum."

I do think the Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD) and other coalition to the party owe Miller Lite and the public an apology. The opposition portrayed a view to the public that this was just going to be a big "beer bash" and an uncontrollable aftermath. They all overlooked the main objective of the party to raise $1 million for Texas Special Olympics.

One concern from the coalition was under-age drinking, which I think is none of their business. Any way, under-age drinking was controlled at the party by issuing yellow wristbands to participants 21 and over.

Giants avoid sweep, up Western lead

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - Bob Knepper got his revenge, but he didn't take delight in beating his former teammates. He just was happy that the Giants beat Houston 5-3 Sunday and widened their lead to six games in the National League West.

Bob Knepper held his former teammates to five hits over six innings, and Pat Sheridan hit a three-run double

Knepper, 7-11, was released by the Astros July 28 and signed by the Giants Aug. 5. He gave up a two-run double to Gerald Young in the second inning and pitched out of a jam in the fifth.

"Some of those guys over there are my best friends," Knepper said. "I played with some of them nine years."

San Francisco, which lost the first two games of the series, has not been swept this season. The Giants now return to Candlestick Park for a 13-game home stand.

Rick Rhoden, 1-6, was knocked out after 11/3 innings in his shortest outing of the season. He allowed four runs and four hits.

Orioles continue slide as Rangers win

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON - Mike Stanley keyed a six-run first inning with a three-run double and Jamie Moyer pitched a six-hitter for his first complete game of the season, leading Texas over Baltimore 8-1 Sunday and dropping the Orioles 2 1/2 games out in the American League East. The deficit is Baltimore's largest since May 10.

The Rangers sent 11 batters to the plate in the first against Dave Schmidt, 10-13, who has allowed 10 runs and 11 hits in his last 1 1-3 innings, and Jose Bautista. Robinson, who has searched in vain for a reliable fifth starter all season, did not decide to start Schmidt until Saturday night.

Schmidt retired leadoff batter Fred Manrique on a grounder, then gave up singles to Rafael Palmeiro and Harold Baines and a sacrifice fly to Ruben Sierra. A single and a walk loaded the bases for Stanley, who pulled a double down the left-field line, clearing the bases. Sierra's fourth-inning double was his 70th extra-base hit of the season, breaking his own club record
